VALHALLA

Woodbridge Senior High School
3001 Old Bridge Road
Woodbridge, Virginia
22192

'83

Prince William Public Library
Manassas, Virginia

Passed another test. Senior Christine Falkenbach smiles radiantly as she leaves one of her classes before lunch. Many seniors take a full schedule load of classes if they plan to continue on to college or some type of technical school.

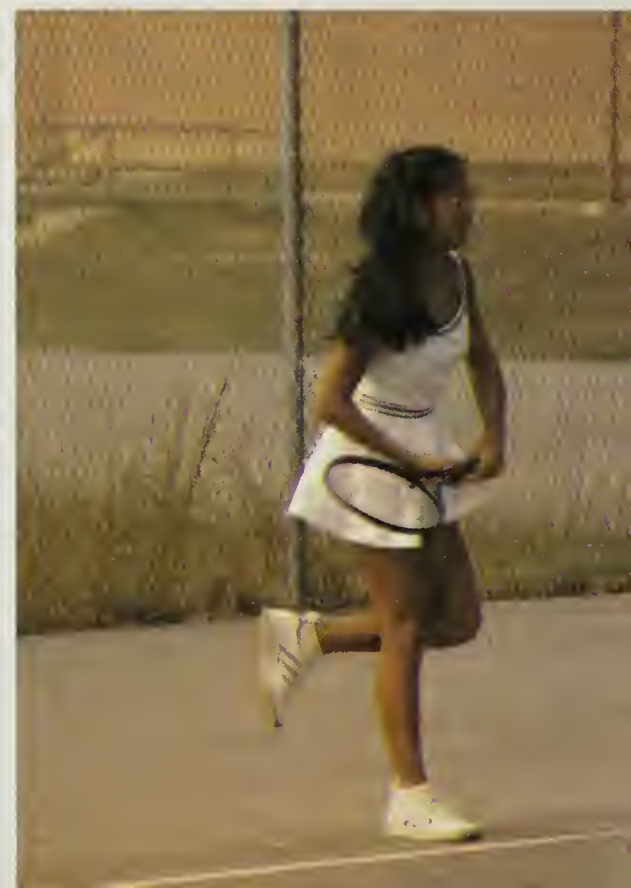
Have they announced who won yet? Junior prom queen candidates, Jamie Candle and Jyl Harne await anxiously with their escorts Mike Myers and Glenn Farineau for announcement of the winner. Candidates from both the junior and senior classes were chosen by the members of those classes.

"Well, I thought it was funny." Sophomore Tracey Luttan grins after fellow oarsman tells a joke during practice. Crew practice was, however, vigorous and called for concentration, as seen on the faces of Sherry Ashton and Diana Happe.

Nothing can stop a Woodbridge fan! Junior Jocelyn Guerrera shows that even in a cast she's got the guts to show up and cheer for her team. Jocelyn broke her leg doing a cheerleading stunt and was in a cast for six weeks.

Following that conclusion . . . Sophomore Joanne Bacon explains the plot of a book she has read for an English assignment. A large part of the work done includes a prepared speech on the book, to be presented to the class.

Send that ball over here! First seated girls' tennis player, Junior Susan Arakaki patiently waits for her opponent to return her serve. Susan was a great asset to the team this year, helping to take them through the many victories they had.



In the Limelight

And 1, and 2 . . . Student Band director John Wight leads the Viking Marching Band through their production at halftime during a football game. John kept tempo and gave cues to different sections of the band during a selection.

"All the world's a stage and we are merely players." William Shakespeare couldn't have been more correct describing high school. Life is much like a long running play. Long-running all right — four years to be exact.

Just like actors, we are many different people during this time: student, friend, boyfriend, girlfriend, frustrated adolescent. We are part of many different groups: clubs, student body, social circles. We unknowingly act out our lives, following a script written for us by someone we may never see.

The many facets of our high school career make up the whole picture, the whole play. We go through the scenes one by one trying not to blow our lines.

Finally it's closing night, our senior year. In the true tradition of the stage we want to go out with a bang. As we leave, the crowd screams for an encore, which next year they will get. For now the show is over but it will be re-enacted every year after us by others.

Surrounded by chicken wire. Junior Mary Troknya works diligently on the junior class homecoming float. The float was constructed at the house of Mimi Thomas, also a junior. The hard work paid off with a first place in the competition.

Innocent beauty. Katie Dallek shows an amazing amount of spirit for someone only two years old. An aspiring cheerleader, Katie is possibly the youngest, most spirited Woodbridge fan around. Will she be Homecoming queen 1998?

Come on guys, get a touchdown! Varsity cheerleaders Amy Howard and Donna Welborn watch intently while a football game is played. The support the cheerleaders encouraged from the crowd of fans boosted the players' morales before and during a game.

Comedy and Tragedy

As we live aut aur pre-determined roles, we gain experience and maturity. We experience the ups and downs — the comedy and the tragedy.

Remember when we both fell madly in love with the same persan, who wanted nothing ta da with either one of us? How funny it was. Then we remember the loss af a family member, or a friend. Not just throùgh death, but the drifting away as twa peaple graw and change and simply choose different paths.

All these bittersweet experiences help us mature. We get a taste of life and realize that soon we'll be on our awn.

Is that my cue? Juniar Jaanne Zimmerman stands ready and waiting far the nexr part af the flag-twirlers' rautine. The students wha were an this team pravided an added attractian at bath pep rallies and faatball games where they perfarmed.

That sounds pretty boring. Juniar Bab Claytan listens clasely ta the assignment his teacher is giving but is prabably thinking af ather things. Many assignments seemed unnecessary ta the students but were deemed useful by the teacher.

Almost time for the bell. Chet Cary, a juniar, has packed his things and is ready ta leave class and praceed ta the next. With anly five minutes between classes, na time cauld be wasted gathering belangings.

'Whadda ya think coach?' Caaches Greg Shifflett and Alan Rass discuss the team's chances far a win. The caaches can run and train the team during practices but came game time, they're an their awn.

Munchin' out . . . Seniar Mark Fajna puts it away in an effart ta finish before the bell rings. The twenty-five minute lunch shifts left just enaugh time for eating and made it difficult ta da last minute hamewark or socializing.

And here she comes. Senior homecoming queen nominee Debbie Masten is escorted by her father onto the football field during halftime at the homecoming game. Past homecoming queens smile and wish her luck as she crosses the track.

I'll get that piece of confetti. Junior Frank Finamore reaches down to pick bits of paper off of a fellow fan's back. During football games, confetti made up of small bits of newspaper, was thrown in reflection of the fans' spirit.

Is there really a horsefly on my back? Yearbook editors Julie Haldren, Lisa Vagler, Amee Singh, and Jim O'Donnell relax in the pool at the Seven Springs Yearbook seminar. Each year the editors go to Champion, Pennsylvania to a workshop sponsored by the publishers.

Faster than the speed of light? No, just a photograph of cars passing Woodbridge Senior High School at night. The stoplights seen in the picture were a new addition to the roadway in front of the school cutting down on many traffic problems.

Attention . . . Please? Speaker of the House, Laura Felske, calls to order a meeting of the S.C.A. Executive Board. A respect for authority and order is necessary for a meeting to function smoothly. This is more difficult at class meetings since there are more people there.

Silent Support . . . Mr. Thomas Gaul watches anxiously as the football team works its way through a tough game. Mr. Gaul's faithful attendance was a boost in morale and showed that he really cared about his school and his students.

This looks fattening. Junior Jennifer Procopio and her date, Senior David Mann, decide on a dessert at the Junior-Senior Prom. The 1982 prom, held at Stouffers' Hotel in Crystal City, was a farewell function from the juniors to the seniors.

"And in this corner . . ." The sophomore float rolls past the crowd at the homecoming game. The game was played against the James Wood Colonels, who wore blue jerseys. As depicted on the float, the Vikings crushed the Colonels.

Ready and Waiting . . . for the 1982 Homecoming queen are 1981 queen Kate Redgate, Principal Thomas Goul, crown bearer David Dollek and flower girl, Katie Dollek. The new queen was given the crown by the outgoing one.

Blow by blow they fell. The first place float in the homecoming parade, built by the junior class is seen rolling through the streets of Lake Ridge during the parade preceding the game. Onlookers were given foresight into the game by the scene on the float.

The Show Must Go On

For the class of '83, the shaw is in its finol year. We see the mony things thot make a show run. It tokes cooperotion. It takes guts, stamina, and determination. We have to want to continue and put aur heorts into everything we do, no matter how unimportant it moy seem. Perhaps we think thot we ploy o minor role. We oren't in mony scenes. We have very few lines during the course of the show. But thot's wrong. Each person is an integral port of the production here at Woodbridge. The show couldn't go on without the actors. The actors couldn't function without the producers. The whole thing just wouldn't work withaut everyane working together.

This book of pictures and words is an account of our production; 1983. Reading it will let you remember the fun times you had ond perhaps even bod times. It is over now, but remember, the show goes on.

'The bake sale is when?'' Seniar class president, Tammy Waadman is asked a questian during an executive baard meeting. Tammy's many duties included setting up fund-raisers that would help ta raise maney far graduatian expenses.

It's beautiful . . . '82 yearbaak editar Pam Rass unveils the first capy af the baak shartly after the shipment arrived. The staff is always happy ta see the final culminatian af their efforts. The happiness is reflected in the smiling faces af the staffers.

"Gimme a V! . . ." Varsity cheerleader Felice Staring leads the schaal in a cheer at a pep rally while principal Thamas Gaul laaks an. Students went ta pep rallies before majar athletic events ta shaw their spirit far the teams.

It's been a long day. Mr. Greg Shifflett puts in same after schaal haurs. Many students dan't realize the amaunt af preparatian that gaes inta each day af teaching. Teachers must plan and organize in advance in additian ta grading papers and making up tests.

All finished! A construction worker on the Sophomore class float, John Perrin, holds up part of the structure for approval. Fromes were built by the students, then covered with the colorful decorations used to make the floats pretty.

Then this week we'll discuss Vandalism. Teen Counselors Susan Arakaki, Kelly Chisholm and Dawn Sundberg go over plans for on upcoming session. Teen Counselors travelled to elementory ond middle schools to work with younger children.

Is this what you're supposed to dip? Prom attendant Senior Marlon Archey ond his date briefly stop at the refreshment table to enjoy some of the sweets provided for the students and chaperones. The dancing worked up a hearty appetite.

Taking a break. A well earned moment of relaxation is taken by Senior Donna Garvey. At the end of the long day, students needed time to wind down. This also gave teachers a moment to themselves.

Highlights

New wave washes over Woodbridge! Punked out and ready to go are Seniors Kim Orr and Lisa Oerrley with friend Heidi Hocker, a junior. New wave was a popular way to dress up on Masquerade day during spirit week.

Smile, it makes people wonder what you're up to. Andrea Navak, a senior, grins slyly at the camera as she passes through the halls to her class. School life took up much of a student's time but room was always made for fun.

Hey Cowboy! In her western attire for spirit week junior Michelle Williams shows off her collection of pictures inside her locker. The likes and even dislikes could be gleaned with just a glance inside the 'metal closet.'

Surviving the Pressure

School is tough, there are no two ways around it. There is a great deal of pressure put on us to keep up our grades. We need certain diversions to keep us from going insane. There are a million things we can do. Everyone has their own method of coping with the stress.

Football games were, of course, a great outlet for our anxieties. The preceeding pep rallies offered a great opportunity to scream away some of our frustrations. The games were the perfect place for socializing and school spirit. It was this very spirit that bonded us together as we helped each other handle the pressures of everyday school life.

As if school wasn't enough, many people held jobs during the school year. Teachers were very sympathetic toward excuses concerning jobs. "I couldn't do my homework Mrs. Johnson, I worked until midnight." No way!

Clubs, shows, and other after school activities were all a part of our hustling, bustling, never-boring high school life. All of your friends could be seen at a dance on Friday night or in line at the local theater or at a neighborhood restaurant featuring good food and video games. If we managed to hack the pressures of the school year, we had to admit we had a good time. Even though we almost died because we forgot our four-grade Chemistry project, or we neglected to study for a major test, we enjoyed ourselves. Throughout it all we said, "This is what high school life is all about."

The pains, the joys, the friends, the failures: all these created moments of memory which we will always remember. Teachers and tests may be forgotten, but the memory of Woodbridge High School will live on.

Watch the pin . . . Junior Dee Rhode watches as her date Jeff Cornuet fixes her corsage. Corsages and boutonnieres were a traditional part of dress for the prom.

And the winner Is . . . Juniors Jamie Conde and Jyl Horne and their escorts Mike Myers and Glen Forineou await the introduction of the senior court. Both Jamie and Jyl were active in the junior class and highly qualified to represent them.

Pretty as a Picture . . . Prom Queen Jennifer Collie is "all smiles" as Miss Cunningham places the crown on her head. The Queen and her date then danced alone to the prom's theme song.

One Day in Your Life . . .

The junior-senior prom, a yearly tradition awaited with great anticipation, proved once again to be a highlighted success. Tails, evening gowns, dinner at a classy restaurant, and a dance held in the ballroom of Stouffers' in Crystal City added up to a night of wonderment and excitement. Originally given in honor of the graduating class, prom has been extended through the years to include both upperclasses. Commented Senior Donna Sutphin, "Prom is like a farewell gift from the juniors to the seniors."

Having begun preparations early, the junior class centered their attention on finding a different angle for the prom. With much thought, the juniors Executive Council started a new tradition. A prom court consisting of five Princesses from both the upperclasses was elected by the students. Of these ten girls, senior Jennifer Collie was chosen as the 1982 Prom Queen while Jamie Condie was selected as the Maid of Honor.

Among various other responsibilities, a band had to be chosen. A committee was formed to preview many local bands throughout the Washington area. A unanimous decision was reached and the band "McCoy" was hired. The band played many recent hits including the prom's theme song "One Day In Your Life."

Through careful planning and many secret meetings, the juniors put forth a successful memorable prom. Mr. Roger Dallek, assistant principal in charge of the junior class, reflected thoughtfully, "I regard a successful event as one where I don't have to worry about last minute details. The plans were followed through very carefully for prom and it was a very relaxing dance for the chaperones." Other administrators also indicated this feeling and Mr. Gaul declared it "the finest prom east of the Mississippi!"

One last dance . . . Junior Tami Woodman and her date Stuart Nunn slow dance as the band plays their last song of the evening. After prom many couples went to friends' houses for small breakfast parties.

What's this? Senior Sam Heermans and his date inspect the food at the refreshment table. Refreshments included such delicacies as chocolate fondue, chocolate mousse, pastries and fruit trays. These were provided by Stouffers'.

The Crowning of a queen. Reigning Queen Kate Redgate hugs her successar senior Debbie Masten. Along with this, the new Queen alsa receives a bauquet af a dazen red rases and a crawn made especially far a queen.

"Boy do I feel dumb!" Caach Greg Shiflett shows his undying enthusiasm during spirit week. Participatian af students, and teachers alike, helped make Hamecaming a complete success and create a feeling af true spirit.

What is this, a line up? Homecaming queens af past years display their beauty ta newcamers and alumni alike. This was one af the largest graups af alumni queens ta be assembled tagether in many years.

The Proud father! Princess Debbie Masten awaits patiently with her father, Mr. Williom Masten, far the moment when the new Hamecaming queen wauld be annaunced. It is traditian for the fathers ta escart their daughters far a little added support.

Close Encounters or what?? A cloud af smoke cavers the packed A. T. Howord stodium. This yeor's Homecoming was quite eventful campared to those of ather years, as there wos, olong with the usual events, o colorful fireworks display.

"That's my girl." Debbie Masten receives a big hug and kiss from her proud dad as her name is announced. Debbie has alsa received many other honors for her abilities as an impartant member af the Girls' Track and Crass Cauntry Teams.

Sunshine and Spirit

"Victorious Vikings??" The stotement of the Homecaming theme was conveyed quite often with o degree of uncertainty. The common problem hod arisen of coming up with floot ideos. Once the creative minds got flowing, however, there was no stopping the spirited Vikes. "We gat off ta o rough stort but once we got started there was no stopping us," exclaimed newcomer ond senior Beth Bacheldore.

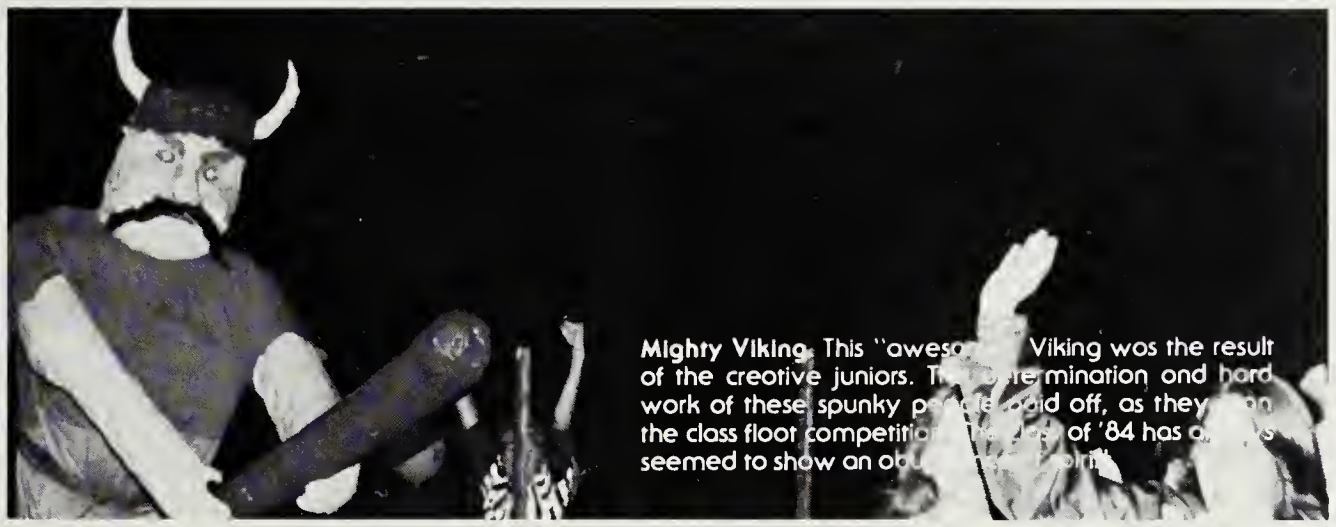
The beautiful afternoon of October 1, was filled with sunshine ond spirit as juniors became especially peppy upon learning thot they hod won the floot competition, along with the seniors regarding their victory in the showcase.

As the beoutiful doy ended, it became a stor-filled night. Filled olso with the anticipation of the moment o new queen would be crowned. When that moment finally arrived a jubilant Debbie Masten was crowned by her predecessar Kote Redgate.

The Homecaming dance was a camplete success as Queen Debbie and her caurt ruled their "kingdom" for the evening. The night was in the hearts and minds of all, the perfect ending to the perfect weekend far oll the Victorious Vikes!!

Last duties. Upan completing her final ride around the field Kate Redgate is escarted ta crown the new queen by her escart Dina Andriatas. Kate naw attends Sauthern Seminary College and returned especially far this accasian.

Here we go! Queen candidate Jamie Candie makes her way carefully tawards the center af the faatball field escarted by her father, Mr. James Candie. This is Jamie's secand year in the Hamecaming caurt, which praves her classmates' feelings far her.



Mighty Viking. This "awesa[illegible] Viking was the result of the creative juniors. T[illegible]re mination and hard work of these spunky pa[illegible]oid off, as they [illegible]n the class floot competitia[illegible] of '84 has a[illegible]s seemed to show an ob[illegible]

It won't stay up! Homecaming queen Debbie Masten tries her best ta keep her newly gained crawn an her head. After the crowning, it is custamary far the queen ta take a ride around the track far all ta gaze upan.

Smile a little bigger, Pam! Senior princess Pam Lisenbee is escarted anta the faatball field by her father, Mr. Danald Lisenbee. Pam was chasen far her warm friendly attitude tawards everyane, and the many activities in which she is invalved.

The Show Goes On

Pep rallies were like a shaw with different acts all gaing an at the same time. The cheerleaders cheered, the band played "Harse," and the flags and the drill team perfarmed. Then there was Ellen Abshire, aur afficial Viking mascat, wha ran araund and made the whale raam came alive. But haw was this all put tagether, and wha was behind it all?

Mr. Thamas Gaul summed it up in ane sentence. "The cheerleaders planned it and set a date, I akayed it, their prablems were sent ta me, and I usually cauldn't salve them!" Actually, that was pretty clase ta what really happened. The cheerleaders wauld plan ta have a pep rally and set the date with the cheerleading spansor, Mrs. Karen Garon's help. After it was akayed by Mr. Gaul, each graup (the band, the cheerleaders, and the drill team) practiced an their awn and then braught it all tagether an that fateful day.

That "fateful time" was ane that usually lasted far abaut half an haur at the end af sixth periad. But as saan as Mr. Gaul made his ever-papular annauncement ta "came an dawn ta the gym," the haapla began. Hardes af spirited students filled the gym ta its full capacity.

Students were enthusiastic abaut pep rallies far different reasans. Same laaked at it as a way ta get aut af class. But then there were thase wha wanted ta shaw their spirit, and still athers wanted ta cheer an their teams. As senior Sandy Gaddy painted aut, "Schaal spirit is really impartant; it's nat anly a way af getting everybady excited abaut the games, but it's alsa a way af unifying the student bady."

Punked-out flute players? Patty Wight, Jane McCarthy, and Sandy Schaegler get inta the spirit af spirit week as they laak ta Mr. Gary Zalman for instructian. The band members always tried ta autda everyane else when it came ta being spirited.

Let's get it straight girls! Band directar, Mr. Gary Zolman, checks with the flag perfarmers to make sure they knaw what to da. The flags were part af the band and Mr. Zalman was in charge af them as well as the band players.

How many are there? It seems as though these varsity football players are infinite in number, but actually there are nat quite that many. All thraugh the faotball seasan, the players were asked ta sit in that section of the stands at every pep rally.

Identical twins? Nat quite, but freshmen Debbie Pischner and Leslie Carver are best friends as most band members da became. Because band members are always together, gaad friendships are nat hard ta find within this group.

And heeere's . . . Senior varsity cheerleoders Jomie Condie and Felice Storing introduce all of the fall sport teams including footboll, girls' tennis, volleyboll, ond cross country. Jomie and Felice are co-captains of the varsity cheerleading squad.

What am I doing up here? . . . Mr. Greg Shifflett sits uncertoinly in front of the students os senior Tommy Waodmon gets ready to hit him in the foce with a pie. The pie in the foce act is o trodition before every homecoming.

The mighty Viking! Senior Ellen Abshire takes her hat off to lead the senior class in a spirited cheer to show that the class of '83 is number one! Every year a new senior is chosen to represent the Vikings as our official school mascot.

The Roles People Play

Just like actars, students are many faceted characters. There are the athletes and the cheerleaders, the listeners and the talkers. There are the players and there is an audience. Same take an active part in schaal life, athers sit and watch. Even as themselves, students cantinually prave that they are versatile and always changing.

When that final bell rings, students shed their schaal rales and dan thase af their awn persanal lives, thase autside af the classraam. Rales are varied as seen in the large number af activities that students take part in. Sametimes, there are different parts played during schaal when students are aut af their classes.

Same students take a great part in schaal related activities. Halding class affices, playing a spart, ar jaining a club are just a few. Others prefer to use their free time in ather ways. These range fram halding a jab ta relaxing at a videa arcade.

Students need time ta themselves and there are many ways ta spend this time. These students excel in everything they da regardless af whether it is a baak repart ar getting a high scare an an arcade game.

Silent vigil. Varsity cheerleader, juniar Lauren Salman, stands steadfastly and watches the faatball team she spends sa much time cheering far play a game. Cheerleading demanstrated spirit and displayed an autgaing persanality.

I don't remember studying that. Juniar Frank Finamare gaes aver class nates with twa fellaw classmates. Lunchtime gave students an appartunity ta sacialize and get last minute studying dane; a chance ta sit and talk with friends.

Just a dab more white here . . . Juniars Julie Walburn and Mary Traknya prepare ta march in the hamecaming parade. The students wha participated in hamecaming activities gave a great deal af time and effart ta shaw their enthusiasm.

A tense moment . . . Senior Gina Bossard bites her nails in anxiety during a nerve-rocking football game. Close games often affected loyal fans to the point where they felt as if they were playing the game.

Still open and cooking . . . Lake Ridge's own McDonald's stays open until the late hours of the night so that students can grab a bite to eat after a late game or dance. Friends meet each other to discuss the evening's events so far and to plan something else.

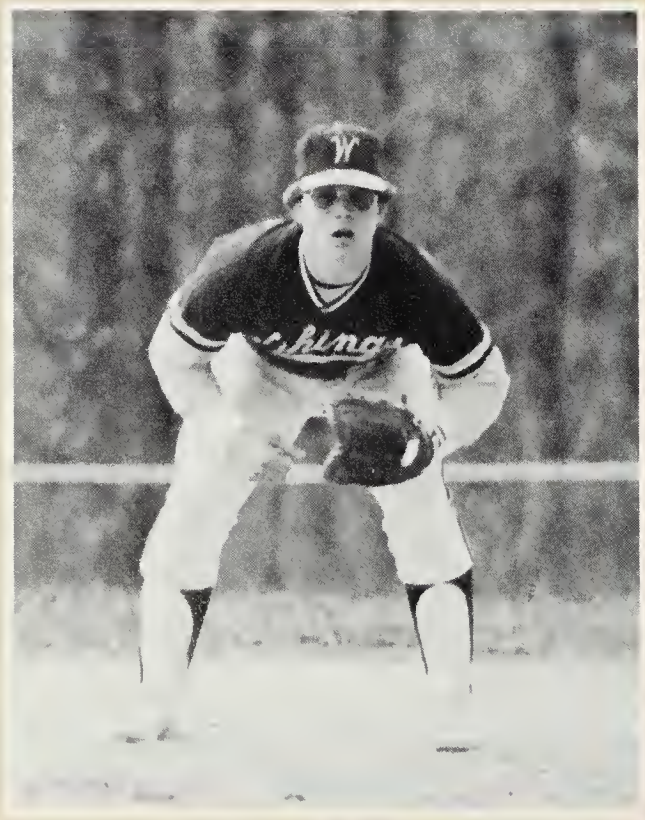
Oh, I've been hit. Senior Andy Martin watches his friend Paul Venus play the video game GORF. The many arcades that opened up in the area allowed students to relax and enjoy an action-filled game.

Keep your eye on the ball. Saphamare David Rache, member af the bays' tennis team, awaits the mament of cantact between his racket and the ball. Careful cancentratian is a key factar in the success af a tennis player's game.

"Where's my mom?" Varsity Cheerleader Jennifer Pracapia laaks intently intra the crawd at a faatball game. Between cheers, the girls had time ta search the stands far friends wha they would get tagether with after the game.

Pull harder men! Members af the Bays' Juniar Varsity crew team pull in earnest during a racing start practice. It was necessary ta practice these starts since mast af the mamentum and speed was attained with a strang but steady start.

Hey batter, batter, batter . . . Varsity baseball team member Bunky Burtan stands paised far actian during a game. Players had to be an their taes during a game since the actian and playing were hard and fast.



Players

Catch me if you can. Joy Wolker, o junior, outsprints the opposing Stonewoll runners with his powerful end kick. Long proctices during the seoson poid off in the roces thot were run.

Throw it here! Sophomore Volerie Sozonov woits to corch the tennis balls thot her opponent is throwing to her. When bolls londed on one side of the net, they were given to the other ployer when the serve chonged.

At the water hole . . . Vorsity footboll ployers Jim Hefti, Wolter Loving ond Richord Kines toke o breok on the sidelines to get o drink of woter. Ployers got thirsty os well as tired while ploying.

Unity in Command

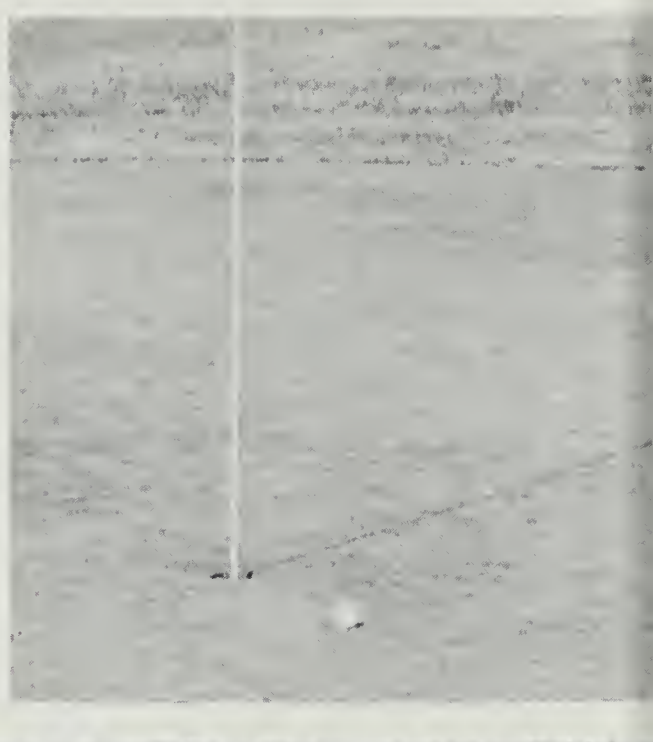
Dedication and determination are both ingredients that help to make a good athlete. Aside from the physical ability necessary to perform to the fullest extent, an athlete must have both dedication and determination to succeed.

Practices were long and hard and lasted late into the afternoon. Some teams even had morning practices that began at 6:00 a.m. and ended right before school started. Aside from team practices, there was also schoolwork. Grades had to be kept up as there was a certain grade average that had to be maintained. Four classes had to be passed to remain a team member.

Sports also tended to dictate your whole life. Schedules had to revolve around practices. Diets were also strictly enforced for teams such as wrestling and gymnastics. It was also hard to hold down a job that provided needed funds.

Behind the performance of every player was the backing of the coaches. They helped team members excel in their field while also reminding them that school was important. No matter how hard an athlete was pushed, the coaches always looked out for their athletes' best interests.

Those who chose to participate in athletics had to give a large part of themselves. One hundred fifty percent was given at all times to get a worthwhile finished product. Athletes also had to cooperate with each other. All of these factors led them to victory after victory.



So close and yet so far . . . A well-ploced shot falls just short of the pin. As good os it may look, a neor miss like this is very frustrating to the golfer. Patience ond an even temper are absolutely necessary for o colm, enjoyable game.

Goin' up . . . Junior Dorron Anderson backswings with good form preparing to send the ball skyward. This was Dorron's first seoson on the team as well as his first yeor ot Woodbridge. Dorran comes from Killeen, Texos, where he ployed for Killeen High School.

Poetry in motion . . . Sophomore Erin Zeller sends one off at practice. Due to the absence of a hame course, team members were farced ta make the daily haul to the Mantclair course. Though at a disadvantage, the team fared well.

Going, going, gone . . . Darran Anderson and Senior Joe Woodord watch as a ball screams toward its destination; hopefully near the hale. Soon to follow is the trek from the fairway to the green where the golfer must prove his putting skills.

Their Hearts: Their Clubs

The weather begins to turn worm, the birds sing, the flowers bloom, ond a boy's mind turns to thoughts of . . . golf? That's right. When other kids were out goofing off after school at McDonalds, or ot home wotching T.V. seven devoted guys were out on beoutiful Montclair Golf Course — putting away.

Once ogoin, the teom hod to drive to Montcloir eoch doy for practice. Though carpools soved gos, it was still a pain.

"Football, soccer, ond boseboll players are lucky," commented Senior Joe Woodord, "o short wolk to the field ond they're set. We had a fifteen minute drive each doy. Not to mention the obsence of a nearby locker room."

On o brighter note, however, the Montcloir course has its odvantoges. One in particular: the Montclair course will be the site of the 1983 District Tournoment. With teams competing from oll over the district, Woodbridge will have the "home-course odvantage." This can be a greot osset when the golfers know the course well.

Despite the inconvenience, the team produced a successful seoson. Hopes are high for the District Title.

Down to the Last Inning

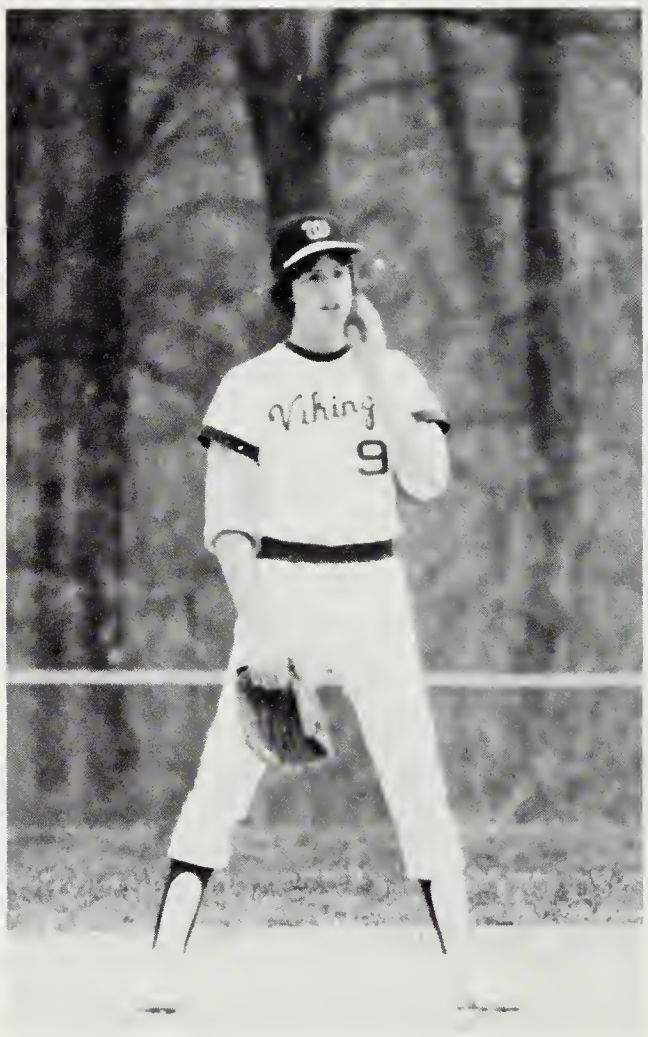
The crack af a bat and the raar af the crawd; or the squeak af the crawd as in the case af most Juniar Varsity teams. Althaugh the J.V. Baseball team faught hard, nat many spectators were there ta cheer them an. They went aut there with a gaod attitude anyway and went an ta a victary far their first game.

The team members gat tagether and vated Tammy Belcher as "mast valuable player." However, according ta Caach Bab Evertan, "The team as a whale played well."

The highlights of the season were the smashing victaries aver Patamac and Staf-ford. As for the rest af the games Coach Evertan states, "The recard daes not reflect many of the clase and hard faught games that went dawn to the last inning."

I wonder if I'm ready for this . . . Freshman Chris Burton gets himself ready for his turn up at bat. It tokes immense concentration and practice to play and this was Chris' first year on the school teom. He was one af the anly freshmen on the team.

Hey! What am I supposed to do here? Sophomore Tony Blevins stands in his position ond osks for instructions on the next ploy. It wasn't possible to set up definite plays because you couldn't be sure of the outcome af each play.



Don't fall over, now . . . Saphomore David Michelaw uses his "pitching power" to throw a fast-ball to the waiting appasing player at bat. The pitcher played a main part in the game, because it wos possible for him to strike the batter out.

Hey guys, watch this! Coach Bob Everton takes some time to do a little practicing of his own. As coach, Mr. Everton had the responsibilities of not only helping the team with their practicing but also to know how to master the skills himself.

Batter-up? Sophomore Robert Hunter concentrates on hitting the ball while Tony Blevins watches from behind the fence. It was always a tense moment when a player went up to bat, and when a game meant as much as this one did, it was even worse.

Ranking High

Ahhh! Spring, the season of sunshine, melted snow, and warm weather. Spring, also a season of hard work, rebuilding, transitions, and adjustments, or in a word — BASEBALL. This past year the courageous Viking sluggers went through all these aspects of spring and many many more. With the loss of eight players to graduation, there was a void waiting to be filled. With eight veteran players returning, six J.V. players were promoted to the ranks of Varsity. Together they formed the mighty Viking defense.

Interrupted in the middle of the season with the switching of coaches, the Vikes had to work harder than ever to maintain stability among their ranks. "It was kind of hard to switch coaches in the middle of the season like that but they kept us going so we didn't fall apart," commented senior David Blevins.

Attitudes were a major factor in the smooth transition between coaches. The team was ready, willing, and psyched to accept Mr. Doug Dean and his ideas towards baseball. Coach Dean had coached baseball for many years when he accepted this responsibility and worked well with all the players.

And work they did. Teamwork became the key word among the Varsity Vikes. The vets worked with the new as well as with each other, striving for a fantastic season, and with everyone's help this goal was achieved. Coach Williams summed the year up in a simple way, but in a way understood by all, he stated, "They did fine, Mighty Fine!"

"Awww c'mon guys." Junior Steve Swortwood woits patiently for his turn at bat. Steve was only one of the six Junior Varsity team members to be promoted to the Varsity ranks. These pramotians were to be o wise move on everyone's port.

"I gotta get to base!" Seniar David Blevins puts forth his best effort to reach first base. David's ability to always be at his best proved an asset to his teom. A proud Woodbridge is losing Dovid to West Point Militory Academy after graduation.

Conference time. Pitcher Mike Schorf ond veteron cotcher Joey Troia discuss their next plan of oction. Through their combined efforts an the ballfield, Mike and Joey contributed ta creote o tough Viking team.

Look at that throw. First-baseman, Bunky Burton warms up before a game by making a powerful throw back to his pitcher. Warm-ups proved to be a great way to psyche the other team out. A good mental attitude was key to any good team's success.

"Alright, let's go!" Seniors Cheryl Phillips and Lisa Dunay find a couple of players to put extra support behind. School support also added extra incentive for all players to show their stuff. Support this year has surpassed that of any other.

Covering up dark circles? Not exactly. Senior Joey Lloyd sits patiently as Joey Troia applies "black-out" beneath his eyes. This special stuff helped block the sun from the players' eyes. The sun often became a major hinderance for the players.

Do you think she'll make it? Coach Kevin O'Neill and team member Brett Snyder look over a shell before a race. The condition of a boat was important for speed, steering, and balance. Dents were sanded out and a varnish applied for increased speed.

Stroke, stroke, stroke!! Coxswain Leslie Fax calls the rate of the stroke to stroke person Lisa Vagler. Girls' team members Robin Stout and Amy Slavkovsky follow her lead in a neck to neck race with two other teams.

Okay guys, just relax. The Boys' Varsity four-man boat awaits the beginning of their race at the starting line. Boats had to be rowed from the boathouse to the starting line and then through a thousand meter race course.

A Stroke Of Genius

"Estes-vous pretes? Partez!" These words were to the crew team members like the gun is to o runner. The start was colled in French ond as the last word left the storter's lips, the boots were off.

In its second yeor at Woodbridge High, crew wos a very popular sport, toking root in o few ond spreoding by word of mouth to mony others. Although boys outnumbered girls three to one, the excitement and competition were seen throughout.

Crew is divided into two seosons, fall being moinly o training season and spring being the seoson when the races were held. Beginning in September and losting until November, crew teom members rowed in sometimes freezing weother under the guidonce of Coaches Kevin O'Neill and Dee Compbell, from T. C. Willioms, a rival school. During this seoson, bosic rowing techniques such os feathering, catching, and keeping the keel are experienced. Later, in the spring this rigorous troining would prove useful.

After three months of rest (and recuperation?) teom members agoin foced the bitter cold and began rowing. Now wos the chance to prove if oll that training was worthwhile.

Practices became longer, sometimes lasting from 3:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. There wos olso a new coach to toke the place of Mr. Compbell. Ms. Sobine Motern, o teocher at Woodbridge, come out to work with the girls. Commented sophomore Leslie Fox, "Ms. Matern gove the girls a chonce to get individual help."

The hard practices did pay off. At least one boot ploced in every roce ond boots from the boys' team went to the races in Stotesbury, Pennsylvanio ond to nationols in Delowore. Boys' teom member Ron Rogers reflected, "This wos the first yeor we were reolly recognized in the 'rocing circle' and practices paid off when we finally got into big league roces."

That race should have been closer. Caaches Kevin O'Neill and Sabine Matern watch intently as their teom crasses the finish line. Cooches were allowed at the starting line in chase baots but ance the roce started, they couldn't interfere.

"Am I really on candid camera?" Track team member Rhonda Davies glances warily at the photographer. Since the different events during a meet were held at various locations on the field, team members got plenty of exercise between races.

Up, up, and away! Senior Chris Bonsignore sails over the pole in practice for the high jump event. High jump is an event which takes concentration as well as speed and agility. To get over the top and not knock over the pole was a great accomplishment.

Is this the right foot? Sophomore Reggie Kane laces up for his next race. The type of shoes worn was important for both support and traction. For the many events in track there was a variety of shoes worn by team members.

Relaying a Victory

As spring ran its caurse, sa did the track team. Every day after school, and sometimes even before, these dedicated runners sweated thraugh grueling warkauts and weight lifting.

Under the supervisian af caaches Ran Davis and Ms. Sue Bana, the runners were steadily pushed to da their best. After adding twa practices a day ta their schedule, the team began ta shaw impravement.

In their daily rautine sprinters accupied the track while distance runners ran a few miles on the trails. "With a strang base of miles during Crass Country and indoor track, aur perfarmances impraved steadily," cammented seniar Richard Kutt.

One af many highlights during the seasan was the accamplishment af the mile relay team. After warking canstantly an exchanges and speed they came within a secand af qualifying far the state campetitian.

"All in all we had a pretty gaad seasan," reflected juniar John Stein.

"I've got it!" Saphamare Jimmy Lang is handed the batan by Rabert Mitchell during a relay race. Pass affs were just as impartant as speed since time was wasted if the batan was drapped ar the runner did not have a gaad grip.

Just a few more yards. Juniar Alice Zavadil painstakingly runs the last part af a race. The anxiety and determinatian is seen an her face after running almast twa miles. An impartant part af the team was played by the girls.

UNDEFEATED IN THE DISTRICT

Heads up! ... Junior Jennifer McLaughlin shows perfect form before sending the ball upfield. Jennifer is an experienced soccer player and was elected to the all-district soccer team.

Come on you guys! . . . Girls' soccer players Mimi Thomas, Kathy Fuller, Shannon Fuller, and Laura Worcester yell encouragement to their fellow players. All members continually showed support both on and off the field and proved to be a great asset.

Coach Rick Marange, Manager Dawn Sundberg, Coach Alan Ross.

Another Winning Season . . .

After winning the championship title four years in a row, one had to wonder at the end af their season why the girls' saccer ream consistently defeated every team in the district. Junior Pam Dankel summed it up in ane word, "Ross." Successfully coaching the team since it was formed, coach Alan Ross proved to be a valuable asset. "He didn't let us get overconfident and he psyched us up and prepared us to play well each game day, especially for the Gar-Field and Stonewall games," commented Junior Leslie King. "We couldn't win withaut Ross," explained Junior Kathy Fuller. Assisted by two-year veteran, coach Rick Morange, Ross improved the team's skills with various drills and instruction. Sophamore Paula Vigneaux observed, "Everyone improved greatly by the end af the season."

Winning games not only meant ball and running skills. "The team was really close, everyane became good friends and we helped each other improve," remarked Junior Co-captain Jenny McLaughlin. Senior co-captain Kathy Short added, "Team unity was a definite advantage to our successful season."

Offensively the Vikings were awesome. Sophomore Melissa Marenick exclaimed, "We worked our passes and shot so well the defense had a hard time stopping us." Indeed, the deceptive forwards outscored their opponents six goals to one.

Even though the midfielders had to play both offense and defense, they showed no let down during the season. Sophomore Patty Short noted, "We midfielders have to be very aggressive to the ball and need to be able to send the ball smoothly from defense to offense." The Vikings showed that ability well, outmaneuvering opponents who challenged them.

The Viking defense, helped by the midfielders, was impenetrable and pulled through in many clench situations to clear the ball out of the goal area. Junior Maureen Sullivan recalled, "Sometimes the ball got past our goalie and one of our fullbacks would make a last minute effort to head it out." "Many games were played when we kept the ball at the other team's end and didn't allow an offensive attack," remarked sophomore Suzanne Holmes. Goalie Lisa Barkdull showed her agility by making diving saves and stealing the ball from the forwards' feet.

Losing only five Seniors to graduation, Coach Ross expected a young, experienced team for next spring. "If everyone works as hard as they did this season, we will dominate the district again," exclaimed Coach Ross.

Looking towards next year, Freshman Annie Sullivan stated, "I can't wait to play Gar-Field again. Those games are the most exciting ones in the season." Junior Kris Miller added, "There is a big intense rivalry between us and Gar-Field. We play an excellent game against them."

Determination was in their voices when they thought of next year, and we should again watch another successful season in the spring.

It's going to be close . . . Sophomore Paula Vigneoux and two of the opposing team wrestle for control of the ball. Paula came from a family of veteran Woodbridge soccer players.

Total Control . . . Junior Pam Donkel collects the ball from her opponent and takes it up the field. Being a veteran soccer player, Pam showed great quality with her expertise.

Super Trap . . . Junior Leslie King uses her experience and perfected form to control the ball and send it to the goal. Having played soccer throughout her high school years, Leslie proved to be invaluable to fellow teammates.

A Major Goal

"Only one mile to go!" That was just one of the 'reassuring' comments made by Coach Angelo Hilios at practices. Practices were held after school every day in order to set the players up for the games ahead.

The beginning of the season turned out to be a good one for the team including a smashing victory over Stafford. However, as Coach Hilios stated, "I think we played a good aggressive defense, but we lacked in offensive those last three games."

After a hard fought season, Marshall Stowell explains, "I think we have the skill, we just have to put it together." According to Paul Marenick, Coach Hilios is the one to do it. "We had a lot of fun with the big guy; we're glad he's back. We won't disappoint him or the school next year."

And the fullbacks are supposed to . . . Coach Angelo Hilios sets up the strategy for the second half while the team sits back and listens. Coach Hilios had to explain his plans to the team so that they would know what to do when they got out on the field.

Heads up! Sophomore Andy Mueck heads the ball on down the field as Potomac players rush after him. This was Andy's first year on the team, and he was a starter for the team. The Vikes won this hard fought game against Potomac.

The ball curved to the left and landed . . . Sophomore Marshall Stowell listens while Coach Angelo Hilios comments on the happenings of the game. After almost every game, Coach Hilios would figure out what skills the team had used to play.

I'm telling you, that's what you have to do . . . At half-time, Senior Kent Shiffert discusses the last half with his brother, Grant. Along with the break the players get at half-time, they also have to make plans for the second-half.

How much further do I have to go? With a clear field, Saphamare Steve Misencik dribbles toward the opposing goal. With two years experience on the team, Steve had what it took to be a starter. It took many years of practice to master the skills.

Racket to Success

"And the match goes to Woodbridge." With scores like these, it's no wonder the Boys' Tennis team finished with a good season. When the matches ended, their district record was four wins and three losses.

With practices beginning in the first week of February and lasting until the second week of May, the boys' team members had little time for other activities. The team members, consisting of mostly sophomores and juniors, met every day after school to practice.

During these practices, much time was spent in 'seating' the players or arranging them in the order of their ability. One player challenged another in order to rise up through the 'seats,' always trying to better his opponent, to be the number one player on the team.

Being a young team had its advantages and disadvantages. Since most of the team will be returning, there was a good 'nucleus' left for a team next year. The young team didn't, however, do well in the tournaments because of this age factor.

Finally, aside from the ages of the team members, there was the fact that Coach Greg Shifflett would not be returning to coach next year. He ended his coaching with a good record. "This year was a rewarding one. The guys were young but the team was better than some I've coached in the past," Mr. Shifflett reflected.

Up we go . . . Senior Adrian Smith rises high above the ground in an effort to return the ball. As a senior, Adrian has past experience on the team and therefore was prepared for a situation like this which called for quick thinking and high jumping.

Strength in Youth

Who could expect o teom with only four seniors to hove o successful seoson? It could only hoppen ot Woodbridge, ond it did thonks to the dedicotion ond hord work of the Vorsity Softboll teom.

The teom wos mostly underclossmen ond even though this made them o young teom, it by no means meont thot there wos o lock of experience. Many of the girls had ployed for the Eostern Prince Williom Sports Club.

The girls took whot wos o potential weokness ond turned it into on osset. Next yeor the entire infield will be returning with the exception of shortstop Donno Hodgson.

Even younger wos the J.V. teom led by cooch Mary Lou Hatzopolis. The team finished with an admirable record. Junior Lisa Coniglio attributes the team's success to cooch Hatzopolis. "She olways knew whot we should do: when we could goof off, ond when we hod to get serious ond proctice."

Although the varsity teom hos lost its four seniors: Carla Uhrig, Donno Hodgson, Kotrino Dwinell, ond Annette Moy; the J.V. lost Cooch Hotzopolis, who left to work at Fair Oaks Mall.

Looks like trouble . . . Coach Nelson watches with apprehension as her team is in the field. Her determination as a coach helped unify and create a winning season. It's not easy being a coach, but Coach Nelson competently handled the pressure.

No Small Spirit

With a clap of their hands, the huddle breaks, and 11 of the best athletes take their positions for another play. To the announcer, the fans, and the school it is only a game. To the team members it is much more.

The Junior Varsity and Freshman football teams worked hard through the long months of training for the season. The practices were rough and tiring but they certainly paid off.

The junior varsity team was small as well as outnumbered by their opponents. With only 26 members, there were many times that players had to play both offensively and defensively. "We were very inexperienced. We had many close games that could have gone either way. There was a good effort shown by all team members. I feel that we will have many good athletes come out of this program," commented coach Mr. Rusty Fortenberry. The J.V. team ended their season successfully.

The freshman team, under the direction of coach Steve Dials, was one of the smallest teams in the district. This did not stop them from having a good year. The freshman offense was the only offensive line at WSHS.

Do it again??? Steve Belcher, receiver for the Junior Vorsity team, wolks bock to his position reody for onother play. The hours of long proctices were tiring but these boys never gove in. The Junior Varsity teom procticed with the Vorsity many times.

A Break In Tradition

Although there were only a few returning starters, a determination to uphold the tradition of winning proved to be a driving force for the new players. Working their way through the spring and summer with weightlifting and running, they were well prepared for the start of practices. With sweat and hard work, they practiced three times daily until plays were perfected.

Team members played several positions throughout the season. Severol offensive players also started on defense. Centering more on the defensive aspect of the game, it was found that few teams could penetrate and score on the Vikings.

Despite a season record of six wins and four losses the team finished third in the Commonwealth District. "Playing teams like Calvert Hall, ranked eighth in the nation, and Annandale gave us a better rating," explained senior Jim Hefti.

Contrary to both the season record and the permanent loss of the Herb Saunders Trophy, the players felt it was a good season. New skills and plays were obtained, along with a feeling of unity among the team. "The record was disappointing. We were capable of better," remarked corner back Michael Myers. He odded, "One good point was the closeness of the team. We always had a good time."

Having more home gomes than previous years, the team found much support in the home stands. "Even when we were losing, people would yell for us," commented tri-coptoin Walter Loving.

"The experience that was gained throughout the season will help the returning players," reflected junior Robert Hunter. "We did our best, but each year there is improvement." The coaches summed it up with "Next year we'll get 'em."

Which way do I go? Senior running back Brad Williams breaks into open field as the opposing team tries in desperation to tackle him. Brad was a tri-captain as well as the team's MVP (Most Valuable Player).

Down, Set, Hut ... Junior quarterback Matt Floyd awaits the snap from center Kerry Macafee as he eyes the opposing defense. Coordination between the center and quarterback was necessary for a quick snap and a strong offense.

Which play? Senior defensive players Walter Loving, Michael Myers, and Jim Hefti move to their positions at the start of a play. The defense allowed an average of only eight points a game scored on them. This was a key part of many wins.

Sweat, Tears, and Skills

Thirty girls sat alang the gym flaar waiting far the judge's signal. In graups af three, the candidates jumped, smiled and cheered their way ta twelve pasitians an the varsity squad. The campetitian was taugh. Nat anly were exceptional skills required, but grades were alsa an impartant factar in the judges decisians.

As tryauts ended, a year af rigaraus respansibilities began. Camp was the first abstacle avercame. Thraugh five sweaty days and nightly evaluatians, the squad warked ta imprave skills and ta ignite spirit. "Camp wasn't anly a time far hard wark. It was alsa a time ta start new friendships and renew ald anes," explained juniar Debbie Natale.

As faatball seasan began, the varsity cheerleaders underwent many changes. Juniar Jacelyn Guerrerra was injured after a fall fram a stunt. Seniar Karen Bawen was maved up making a squad af thirteen.

Another new additian ta the squad was spansor, Mrs. Karen Garan. "Mrs. Garon was a friend ta all af us. She wauld came ta practice and we even taught her haw ta da a shaulder sit," explained juniar Michelle Williams. Having cambined the duties af a spansor and the qualities af a friendship, Mrs. Garan praved ta be an asset ta the squad.

Alang with the benefits af cheering came the unexpected expenses. Baking far teams, materials far pasters, and the need far shaes and unifarm rental left many members af the squad with a lass af funds. "Many peaple dan't realize the respansibilities and the expenses that came with the pasitian," stated seniar Pam Lisenbee. "We feed almast every team at least ance and we try ta decarate the lacker raams an impartant game nights".

Besides the breaking af the traditian af a squad af twelve, varsity alsa gained three male cheerleaders far the Gar-Field faatball game. The cambined effarts af Seniars Mike MacDanald, Sean McGinnis, and Jerry Lave allawed the perfarming af taller and larger stunts.

Despite a year af many changes and additians, the squad af '83 praved ta be ane af many talents. "Cheerleading requires skill," cammented Seniar Jennifer Pracapia, "But mast af all it requires the willingness ta wark with athers ta achieve a gaal."

Towering Heights . . . The cheerleaders discaver the benefits af having three male squad members as the crawd admires the pyramid before them. Stunts required cancentratian strength, and balance.

Mechanical spirit . . . With a cast an her leg and a wheelchair as a frant row seat, juniar Jacelyn Guerrerra displays her undying spirit. Jacelyn faund that stunts were aften mare dangerous than they appeared.

Laughter and leadership . . . Co-captains Jamie Condie and Felice Staring exit the caurt after a cheer. The ability ta cambine work and fun allowed Jamie and Felice ta successfully caardinate practices and unite all squad members.

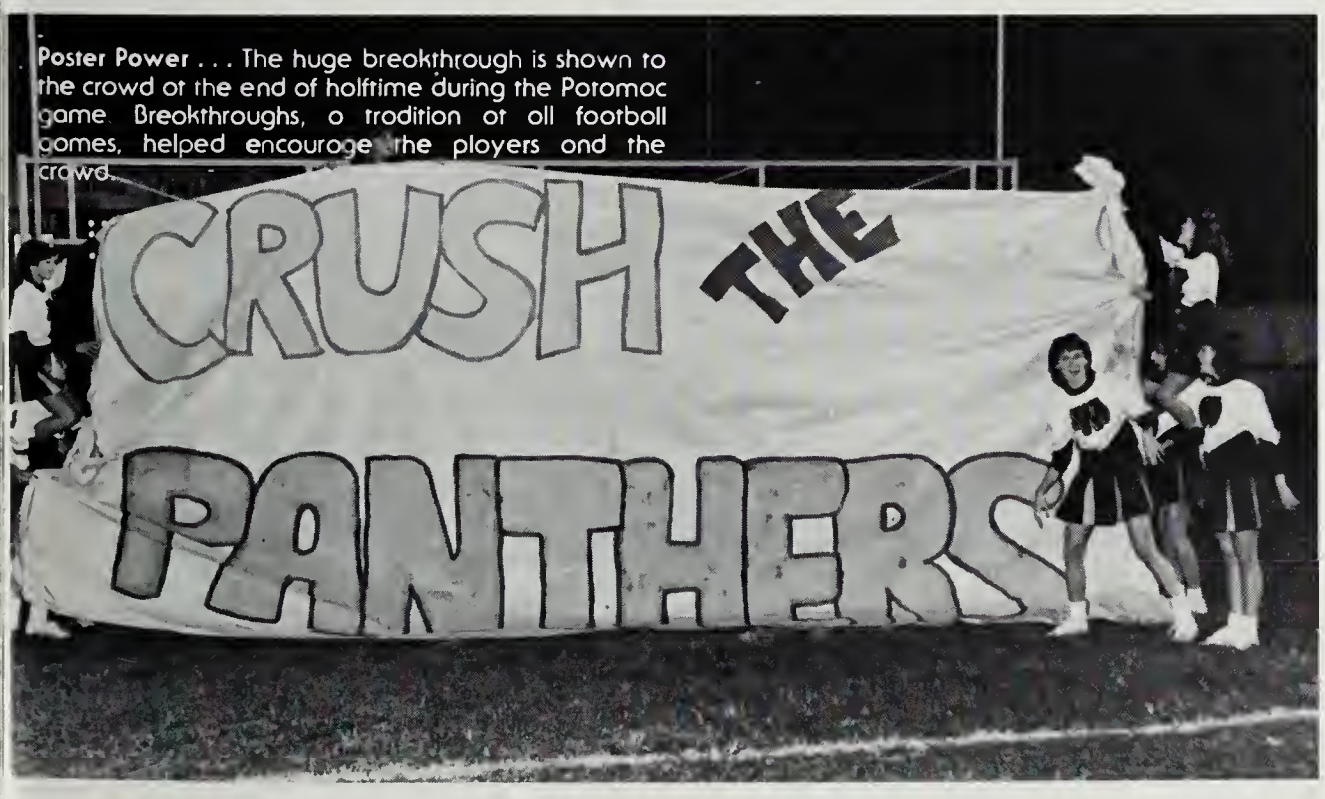
JUMP, JUMP UP THERE . . . Doing her herkey, junior Debbie Natale displays the precision that has helped her to continue cheering for the past three years. A variety of jumps allowed the cheerleaders to sharpen skills and entertain the crowds.

S..E..N..I..O..R..S . . . With a smile, senior Pom Lisenbee helps ignite spirit at a pep rally. Pep rallies were a major part of building school spirit and required much organization to be a success.

A guy cheerleader? Senior Jerry Love goes through the sharp motions of a cheer during the Gar-Field game. Jerry, along with two other guys, found out that there is more to cheering than smiles.

Poster Power . . . The huge breakthrough is shown to the crowd at the end of halftime during the Potomac game. Breakthroughs, a tradition at all football games, helped encourage the players and the crowd.



It's cold . . . Watching the band during halftime, honorary cheerleader Sean McGinnis, Debbie Natale, Michele Williams, and Lauren Salmon find that the bench isn't as warm as is thought. The cheerleaders supported the marching band and the flag twirlers as well as the players.

What a mascot . . . Future cheerleader Katie Dallek and co-captain Jamie Condie rest during halftime. Katie, the daughter of assistant principal Mr. Roger Dallek, was often a visitor to the track during Homecoming festivities and regular games.

Winning Spirit

The tension mounted, and a hush fell over the gym. The judges returned and announced the names of the twenty girls who were to represent our school as Freshman and J.V. cheerleaders. They formed two squads of ten girls each. "Making the team was a challenge, but the real work started after tryouts were over!" admitted Annette Simpson, J.V. cheerleader. The real work meant long hours spent learning new cheers and stunts, and just molding the ten individuals into one working group.

Summer camp, which both squads attended, helped to unite the girls and to build friendships. Freshman cheerleader Robin O'Brien agreed, stating, "Camp helped us get to know each other and become more than just teammates."

Throughout the year, the Freshman and Junior Varsity cheerleaders worked, practiced, and performed their way to becoming a unified spirit that set fire to the school, and carried an enthusiastic student body to their goal of achieving school spirit.

Rebound that ball . . . Some Freshmon cheerleaders cheer on the boys' bosketboll team. Because of limited gym space, all of the cheerleoders could not cheer ot once. Each squad was divided into groups of five.

Support for the Victors . . . Freshmon cheerleoder Stocy Bostan enthusiasticolly cheers the freshman footboll teom on to onother victory. The continuol support the cheerleoders offer to the other sports helps Viking teams win.

The Pain Express

As the Viking wrestlers run out to the mats in their green and gold sweats, it was hard to see why they called themselves the "Pain Express." After the matches started, however, one did not wonder at their title. The thirteen varsity wrestlers and the twenty-two J.V. knew the true meaning of stamina and endurance.

Practicing everyday, except Sundays and Christmas day, for three hours, left the athletes ready for action. Workouts consisted of stretching, running, conditioning, and working on moves. Extra running often helped to lose the unwanted pounds.

Under the direction of Coach John Tompkins and assistant Coach Alan Ross, the Vikings completed a successful season. The team ranked high in the districts due to the shutouts of such teams as Stafford and North Stafford. Also, a record number of dual matches was won.

Each match began essentially the same way. Co-Captains Sean McGinnis and Jim Hefti said a prayer and then every wrestler was left to psych himself up for his match. Many wrestlers had good luck symbols. Sean McGinnis remarked, "Jerry Love and I have our 'terrible towels.' We never wrestle a match without them."

The off-season was just as valuable as the regular season to many wrestlers. "New techniques were taught at camps in the summer. We also streamlined the moves we already knew," explained senior Jerry Love. Most of the team attended camp in the Poconos. However, two varsity athletes, Scott Reilly and Jim Hefti, went to the Iowa Intensive Wrestling Camp which was considered by many to be the best camp in the nation.

The JV wrestlers were also a valuable asset to Viking sports. "JV is a way for wrestlers to gain experience, but that doesn't mean that it is less competitive than varsity," stated Hugh McMenamin.

Both teams faced the district tournament with a winning record, much expertise, and another successful season behind them. As always, the season ended with one major thought . . . Wait until next year!

Start the clock . . . Freshman Chris Lockett eyes his opponent as the first period begins and hopes to gain a takedown. Being a member of the JV team allowed Chris to gain experience for a future wrestling career.

Pin 'em . . . As the crowd watches, junior Kenny Todd attempts to pin his opponent. Having wrestled for three years, Kenny found that an individual pin often decided the team's victory or defeat.

Winners all the Way

The Freshman and Junior Varsity basketball teams showed just how great they really were. The freshman team finished with a record of 9-2 and the J.V. ended with an 11-4 overall record. Both of these teams had dedicated team members who worked hard to get to the top.

The freshman team, under the direction of coach Greg Shifflett, won the title of Commonwealth District Champions. These boys put in hours of practice getting ready for their opponents. With the hectic schedule of the gymnasium, practices were fit in wherever time would possibly allow. Ranging from twenty-five minutes to two and a half hours this team took any time that they could.

With a record of 9-2 no one would ever realize how little time they were given. In the opening game against Osbourn Park, their only non-district loss, these young Vikes suffered from bad breaks and disorganization. Despite this loss these freshmen went on with an eight-game winning streak before being beaten by Stafford High School the second time they met. Stafford was their only district loss.

Among the top scorers for the team were Eric Ballentine, Robbie Raines, David Ruth, and Greg Wassenberg. These few did not do everything for there was a team effort shown at all times.

Without the help of the managers Darrin Neiner, Scott Plum, Eric Santana, and Dan Zavadill, these teams might of had some problems. These boys kept the water bottles full, always had towels ready, and worked as hard in practices as the players.

The Junior Varsity Basketball team, coached by Mr. Rusty Fortenberry, finished with a record of 11-4. They had two district losses as well as two losses outside of the district. These boys had a great season, and worked well together. David Maes commented, "No matter who was on the floor we made it a team effort. We got along well and that probably helped us very much."

Teamwork was proven when one looks at the contirbutions that were given by everyone. Team members such as Robbie Benson, Andy Hook, Mike Jiminez, David Maes and John Martin, all were given the opportunity to show their ability to score. Rebounding played an important role in taking control of the ball as well as stopping their opponents from scoring. The members of this team played for the team and this was the key to everything.

That Fighting Spirit

The Boys' Varsity Basketball team underwent a considerable amount of change due to the graduation of nine players, four of which were starters. Coach Don Brown considered this year as a rebuilding year for the future Vikings.

In addition, injuries to Brad Comey, Chris Winans, and Jimmy Pritt failed to give the Vikes the experience they needed to overcome the loss of the graduated Seniors.

The Vikes experienced many hardships throughout the year due to the lack of experience of the team's younger players. Coach Brown commented, "There were many close games that were disappointing, but the guys never quit fighting to win.

Being Coach Brown's second year coaching at Woodbridge Senior he has won the respect of his players as well as the rest of his coaching staff. "Even though it's only Coach Brown's second year coaching me, he has taught me many things that will be helpful in my future: not only with basketball, but with life in general," added Senior Brad Comey.

O.K., here's the plan . . . At the end of the first quarter the Vikes came to the bench to listen to Coach Brown's advice on what to do next. Coaches are always thinking of strategy to improve their team throughout each game.

I'll take this one Mike . . . Junior Joe Roadcap times his jump perfectly to rip down the rebound. Joe's ability to jump has helped the team tremendously. Rebounds were an important part of the Vikings strategy.

But They're All Freshmen!

Usually, Junior Varsity and Freshmen teams are formed for their respective grade levels. But for the girls' basketball teams, something revolutionary happened at the beginning of their seasons. Not only did the girls' freshman basketball team consist of freshmen, but every member of the JV team was also a freshman! Both coaches agreed that they had an unusual situation for their teams.

Though consisting of only seven players, the JV Girls' basketball team quickly proved themselves as the powerhouse in their district. "One reason we won districts was because of the hard work the girls put into their season. They never slacked up in practice," commented Coach Gene Harris. In his second year as the Junior Varsity coach, Mr. Harris' experience from previous years showed through both after school at practices and when games were close. "We couldn't have had a great season without him," remarked Freshman Lynn Smith.

Practice usually consisted of various offensive, defensive, and passing drills, and conditioning. "Don't forget the running!," exclaimed Freshman Donna Decker. Freshman Mary Morrison added, "We also scrimmaged with the Varsity team to improve our game. Practicing with them helped us during our season."

Looking forward to next season, Freshman Mary Morrison declared, "Because we were Freshmen, next year should be as good and even better than this year." Indeed, the winter of '83-'84 should bring about even greater rewards than what J.V. players had earned in previous years.

The Freshman girls' basketball team was coached by Mr. LePoer. Through his guidance the players improved immensely throughout their winter season.

"Some of the girls had not even played basketball before tryouts. But everyone put in a complete effort and improved 100% by the end of the season," commented Coach LePoer. "We were very strong on defense, but needed some offensive work." Many drills and scrimmages in practice balanced that out, paving the way for interesting and emotional games. Every game was close in playing and scoring. Though the team sometimes came up short at the end, they showed promise for the future. Watch out for them next season!

"We've got to keep on shooting" . . . Coach Lewis LePaer instructs Freshmen players during one halftime break. Though many people missed their games, they proved to be very exciting and were very close, even down to the last few seconds.

Taking it to the basket . . . Freshman basketball player Melissa Caak drives past appanents after receiving a pass. Inexperience at the beginning af the seasan was quickly replaced by educated passes and lightning-quick maves fram all players an the team.

"And for the second half" . . . J.V. Coach Harris advises players during halftime. Strategies were often changed, pep talks were given, and a needed break for the girls were combined between halves, helping them to complete exciting and successful games.

Up, up and away! . . . Freshman Valerie Hibbard seemingly flies through the air while shooting on a breakaway run. Individual's quick thinking and smart shooting combined for a great team effort, contributing to a very successful season.

Taking it down t[illegible]urt . . . After collecting a rebound, JV Freshm[illegible]a Decker gets a step ahead of her opponent [illegible] moving downcourt. Getting rebounds not only pre[illegible]ed the opposing teams from scoring but also helped in setting up passes and shots.

Talk about domination! . . . Freshman Mary Marrison gets the upper hand on her opponent during a jumpball. Mary's whole family was involved in basketball, and constant practice together enabled her to humiliate many opponents throughout the season.

Okay, Here's our plan . . . Coach Ran Davis talks to his team during a time out. All the girls were required to listen to the talks because they were about the strategy for the remainder of the game. These talks were usually at the end of the games.

Where did it go? One of many starting sophomores, Kathy Martin, a varsity veteran of two years, practices her layup during warmups. Kathy started at point guard throughout the season.

Gaining Experience

Although varsity teams usually consist of juniors and seniors, the girl's varsity basketball team had four starting sophomores. Starter Kathy Martin remarked "With all the sophomores on the team, our future looks very good."

Woodbridge started the season by hosting the Christmas tournament. The lady Vikes came in first place after defeating Langley High School and Fairfax High School.

The team had a winning start but also faced the disappointment of defeat. Amazing comebacks, which seemed natural to the team, held losses at bay on many occasions. A memorable moment of the season was the defeat of Potomac in double overtime.

However, the highlight of the season was when the Vikes defeated Gar-Field for the first time in ten years. During the game, senior starter Angie Jones received an injury which affected the team's performance for the rest of the season. With one starter out, the team found a hole in their offense.

Although injuries hampered the Vikes, the girls had seven wins and five losses in the district. Sophomore Tina Smith summed the team's feelings when she commented, "We didn't win it all, but we are looking forward to next year's season."

The net is hot. After working the ball into an opening, six foot two sophomore Dana Walvius reaches above her opponent to shoot. Dana, coming to Woodbridge after a year at Gar-Field, proved to an asset to the young team.

Make that free throw . . . Sophomore Tina Smith attempts a foul shot as Potomac players and her teammates get ready to rebound. This was Tina's second season as a starting guard for the Vikes.

Shoot the hoop . . . Senior Angie Jones perfects her jump shot during practice before a game. As co-captain and a leading scorer, Angie's absence due to an injury was strongly felt by the team.

Check that follow-through . . . Junior Lisa Coniglio takes a jump shot during the pre-game warmups. As a junior and one of the older members of the team, Lisa was often relied upon for leadership during the games.

I just got finished telling them that . . . Girls J.V. Coach Ms. Kathy Nelson gives signals to her players as she watches from the sidelines. Coaches often have helpful advice and opinions to their players which often turned the game into a victory.

It's my turn . . . Sophomore Donna White explains to the score table that it's her turn to serve next. Being Donna's second year of playing volleyball, she was a big help to her teammates and the upcoming freshmen.

Come on, you can do it . . . Freshman Lisa Buige gives teammate Sophomore Donna White some support as she gets ready to serve the ball. Support from friends and fans helped the players to strive harder for a victory.

Order on the court

Volleyball to some people may not be the most popular sport in the world, but the girls who have dedicated themselves to the hours of practice and hard work thought differently. Sophomore Tina Mickle commented, "When I first started ploying Volleyball few fans showed for the games, but every year it seems more people get interested and come to cheer us on."

The Girls' J.V. Volleyball teom consisted on only freshmen and sophomores. "For a young teom they did very well," replied J.V. Coach Mrs. Kothy Nelson, "and I look forword to a stronger and better seoson next yeor."

The season ended with five wins and five losses. Sophomore Barbie Ray commented, "We tried our best, but at times our heads were not in the game." Volleyball took a lot of teamwork and concentration to pull off a victory.

Coach Nelson is only in her second yeor of toking on the responsibility of coaching volleyball and these hard-working girls. She had already won the respect and dedication of her team members. Sophomore Donna White reflected, "I think Cooch Nelson is a very good coach and we've learned a great deal from her."

Come on, blow the whistle . . . Sophomore Tina Fizer impotiently awoits the referee's whistle before serving the ball. Waiting for the referee to blow his whistle wos often nerve racking and coused mony ployers to lose their concentration.

Follow the leader . . . The Girls' J.V. Volleyball team demonstrates one of their many warm up exercises. Warm-ups were a necessity and taken seriously because they usually reflected the play when one walks on the court for the stort of the gome.

Watching and waiting . . . Junior Lisa Gallo and senior Pat Hall watch to see if their point strategy gave them another point for the scoreboard. The team had to be organized in order to set up definite point plays.

Where'd it go? . . . Senior players Dana Henry and Chris Miller wait for their opponents to return at one of their many home games. Returning a volleyball took skill which had to be built up by the girls during long, hard hours of practice.

Planning the strategies . . . Junior Liso Gallo discusses volleyball strategies before an away game with her teammate Dana Henry. The team often went over their game plan before they went out to the gym to play their matches.

Giving some advice . . . Varsity Volleyball player Joanne Jewell gives some advice on how to handle some hard plays to a junior varsity player. J.V. players often turned to their older and more experienced counterparts for help.

Trying Their Best

At first glance volleyball didn't seem like a lot of effort, but for the '82-'83 girls' Varsity Volleyball team it was a long, hard season. Struggling to win every game, the girls turned out some close matches. When the final bell sounded, however, the score showed the spirit of a team which had tried its hardest.

The girls lost their first game but came back to win the next two games. But the season, however, went down from there. The girls worked and played, but not as well as expected. "We really didn't play to our potential," pointed out Charlene Reese who was a senior on the team.

In the end, the season ended sadly with a lost to Gar-Field. The last seven losses of the season, Gar-Field was a big disappointment to all. The girls had turned out a 3-7 season, hardly the winning season they had hoped to accomplish.

Despite their seasonal record, the girls' team spirit made the season a worthwhile effort. "Thisyear really wouldn't have meant anything without our great coach," added senior Dana Henry. So the girls ended their season with few regrets and a lot of hard work accomplished.

Starting Over

The Viking Girls' Tennis team brake even this year with six wins and six losses averall. In District campetitian, however, the ladies came aut ahead, winning faur matches and losing just three. Junior Lisa LeMay, a new player this seasan offered, "We had a yaung team this year and we did pretty gaad."

Due to the autstanding play the tap seeded campetitars, Susan Arakaki and Valerie Sasanav, as well as the ather members af the team, the girls came in 3rd place aut of eight teams. Junior Susan Arakaki is looking farward to next year's seasan. Susan feels, "We've gat a lat af people coming back next year. I think we have a good chance to win Districts in '84."

This seasan, Caach Lewis Farrest stressed skills and technique. He warked out drills and taught the team same mare advanced techniques than what they had used in the past. Teammate Cathy McGinnis cammented, "It was a lat af hard work, but it was warth it."

Since this year's team was young — there was anly ane Seniar an the squad — it should be taugh ta beat next year's Vicking team!

All right, ball . . . I'm ready for you! Saphamare Sandy Mager prepares ta send the ball aver the net. Thaugh it was anly Sandy's first seasan an the team, she performed extremely well in daubles play, and will be a great help ta the team in the future.

You better watch out . . . because here comes Lisa! Lisa Jacksan gives her appanent a glaring laak that seems ta say 'watch aut'! Lisa, wha was the lane freshman an the squad this seasan, is a strang player and will be very valuable in the future.

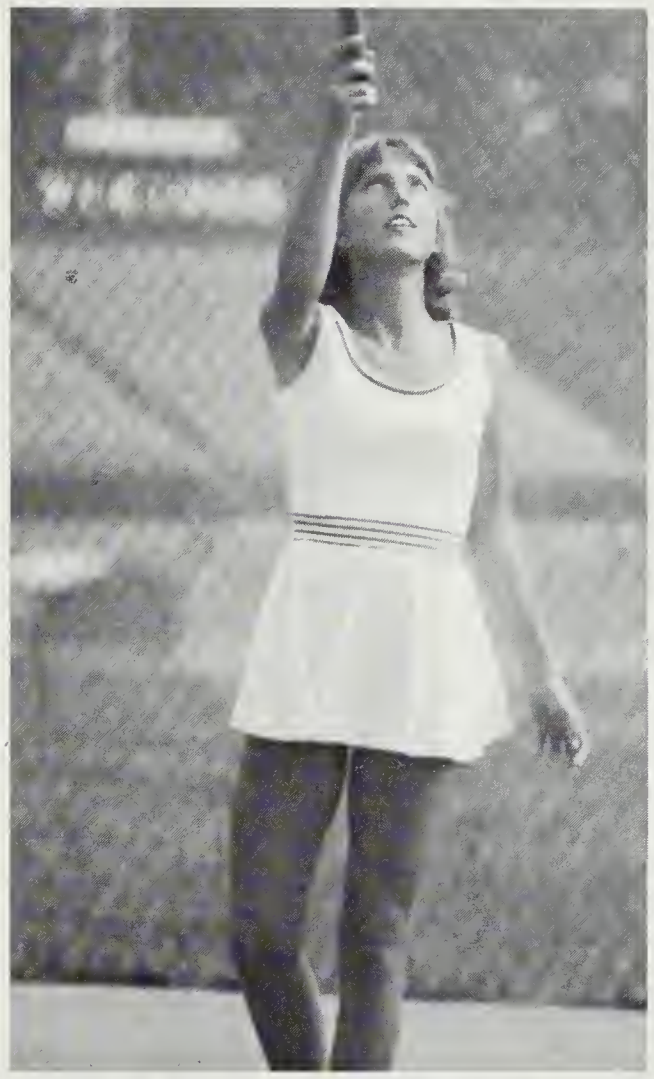
Just a little lower now . . . Team member Cathy McGinnis eyes the ball suspiciously before she hits it over the net. It takes good aim and eye-hand coordination to place a high ball accurately over the net. Cathy, a junior, is a veteran member of the team.

Concentration . . . The look of intense concentration shows on her face as Valerie Sazanov aims the ball to the far corner. A two-year veteran to the team, Valerie was a valuable asset in both singles and doubles play.



Here it comes . . . Junior Lisa LeMay watches the ball intently before slamming it over the net. Though this was Lisa's first season on the team, she played a hard, strong game and will be valuable next season.

Anticipation . . . Top-seed Susan Arakaki readies herself to give the on-coming ball a powerful send-off with a forehand drive. This stroke can give much power if done correctly Susan is a two-year veteran and a valuable member of the team.

All Psyched Up

And S-T-R-E-T-C-H, two, three, four. Perhaps one of the more demanding ond strenuous of school sports wos Indoor Track. As the name implies, Indoor Track was held inside. Becouse of this, there was no discus and the hurtles were only holf os long at fifty-five or sixty meters long. Cooches Henry Brodley ond Ron Helmer kept the teom going with stretching ond running every doy. Weightlifting was every other doy ond wos o large port of enduronce and strength troining.

Although Indoor Track is not o well-publicized spectotor sport, this yeor hod its fringe benefits. The mile relay team wos token to o meet in Tennessee where college teoms were olso competing. As it turned out, ESPN (The coble sports chonnel) was taping the college meet ond some of the reloy teom monaged to make a brief oppeoronce on ESPN. Members of the mile reloy team also monoged to see Herschel Wolker. As if this was not enough, the reloy teom broke the existing record of our school for the mile reloy.

Though the mile reloy team did have a fontostic year, the other members of Indoor Trock olso did well throughout the seoson ond deserve credit for their part. The teom was hard working ond well-monoged. One of the members of the 880-meter reloy teom wos Bob Benko, Bob soid of the teom, "With the help and direction of the coaches, Indoor Track turned out to be o well-rounded, solid teom. A lot of the people on the team also ron outdoor trock ond used Indoor for more running time ond o heod stort on training." Maybe the trock team does not receive enough ottention or turn-out for its efforts, but they deserve respect for their tolents ond perseveronce. The cooches should olso be recognized for the time ond work thot they put into the teom.

Remember to pace yourself. Debbie Mosten and Doug Stonton tolk before a heat. Each heot ron o group with the results tollied ofter oll heots hod been completed.

I can fly! Rhonda Davies opplies her technique and form in clearing the lost of the hurdles. Only with long hours of proctice could form be developed to a competitive level.

Concentrate on your run. Track veteron Steve Vergotte tokes o quick moment to gother his thaughts before running in the relay event. A brief period of concentrotion often mode the difference.

And in this corner we have . . . Junior Mork Rau looks on os teommates compete in o meet. Between events, contestonts often reloxed ond got themselves 'psyched up'.

Go Ed, go! Ed Leof pushes for position, getting good position and good speed could win a race. But only in using strategy wisely could o runner win. With this in mind, Ed gains position fost.

Coke is it! Bobby Wright takes a coke break during a meet. Runners hod to watch what they drank before their event to avoid the pain of a cramp during competition.

You had better loosen up now, Bill. Cooch Henry Bradley quickly gives Junior Bill Ferro o few pointers for his event. Coach Brodley kept in touch with the teom as a whale ond individually.

Winners on the Run

With the arrival of Coach Ron Helmer, cross country team members were faced with many new changes. These new adaptions proved easy, as seen in a successful season for both the boys' and the girls' teams.

Team members were contacted in early summer and a rigorous training season began. Depending on the ability of each individual runner, weekly workouts consisted from anywhere between twenty and ninety miles. "Along with the new coach came additional miles and this increase improved our ability and endurance," reflected Senior Brian Kurtz.

At the start of the season regular in September, the girls showed promise while the successful season of last year continued for the boys. Coach Helmer's strategy was to hold the girls' performances back until the "big" meets. The idea behind this was to allow the girls to peak in the regional and state meets.

At the close of the season both the girls' and the boys' teams ran in the district meet. Predictably, the boys finished well, placing first. The girls too ran well enough to finish first, surprising many enthusiasts. Both teams went to the regional meet in Charlottesville and again, both teams placed first.

The final race of the year, the state meet was also held at University of Virginia in Charlottesville. The team ran in an attempt to finish the best in the state. Much to the disappointment of the runners, however, neither team placed first. The boys finished second and the girls finished an unexpected eighth. Both teams left feeling proud and helped to make cross country a sport to take pride in at Woodbridge.

And leading the pack is . . . Junior John Stein and Senior Brion Kurtz lead the varsity team in a practice worm-up. Interval workouts on the track were a large port of cross country practices. They helped increose speed ond endurance for long work-outs.

Close your eyes and forget the strain. Team members junior Kim Knopp ond senior Erik Koldmoo close their eyes to lessen the stress endured during o work-out. These work-outs ranged from five miles to o grueling thirteen during on ofternoon practice.

Gymnasts End Strong

The air in the gym is thick with the smell of yeors of waxing, and the sweot of competition. Mixed in at this mament is a drifting cholky dust which coots the othletes' throats ond mokes their breothing somewhat shallower. The gymnast steps up to begin her routine on the uneven bars. She signols thot she is reody and prepored to do her mount. Whot roces through the clockwork of her mind ot this moment, whot will be her last thaughts as she leops ond grasps the chalky wooden bors which will, for the next few moments, become o port af herself?

She could soy to herself, "I'm going to be great, the teom needs my best efforts, ond I'm up for it. I've procticed oll week and I'm ot my peok." That would be the best thought. However, she could olso be dwelling on a past injury or o missed or fouled execution. This would not be in her interests or those of the teom.

Gymnastics is on individuol sport being played as a teom spart in high school leogues. It is an interesting twist. The girls wauld like to perfarm at their personol best, but at the same time to oct os o team member and direct their skills towords a teom win.

The gymnostics team was fairly strang. They had come off a tremendous seasan with experience and depth. During this seasan, there were o few minar injuries and a couple of losses. However, this did nat hurt their depth or shake their canfidence. Instead, these setbocks strengthened them and made them more determined to perform well. Under the leodership of their cooch, the team rebounded from their eorlier losses and did well at both the district and regional meets and finished aff their season by hasting the stote meet.

Please tell me this isn't a hold-up . . . Seniar co-captain, Terri Swart, practices far her balance beam rautine an the side while her teammates are perfarming. Terri and her sister Sally have been tremendaus additians ta the depth and perfarmance af the team.

Hey! . . . Be carefull . . . Ms. Sue Bana caaches a team member an the side while placing a mat and preparing ta spat a balance beam rautine. Spatting was an impartant task ta help pratect an athlete fram seriaus injury.

What's happening! . . . Seniar co-captain Terri Swart anxiausly awaits her turn ta perfarm her rautine. There are three events in gymnastics, and if yau're nat perfarming, yaur suppart far yaur teammates, was well needed.

Just a few more moves! . . . Juniar Mary Schaefer shaws intense cancentratian as she maneuvers the beam. The beam is ane af the mast difficult apparatus the gymnasts must cantend with, and much effart is placed an cantral.

What do I say when I go Up? . . . Seniars Kevin Aker and finalize their nates before they ga up to make their speeches at the onnual DECA inductians. Much preparation was needed ta get the inductians under way.

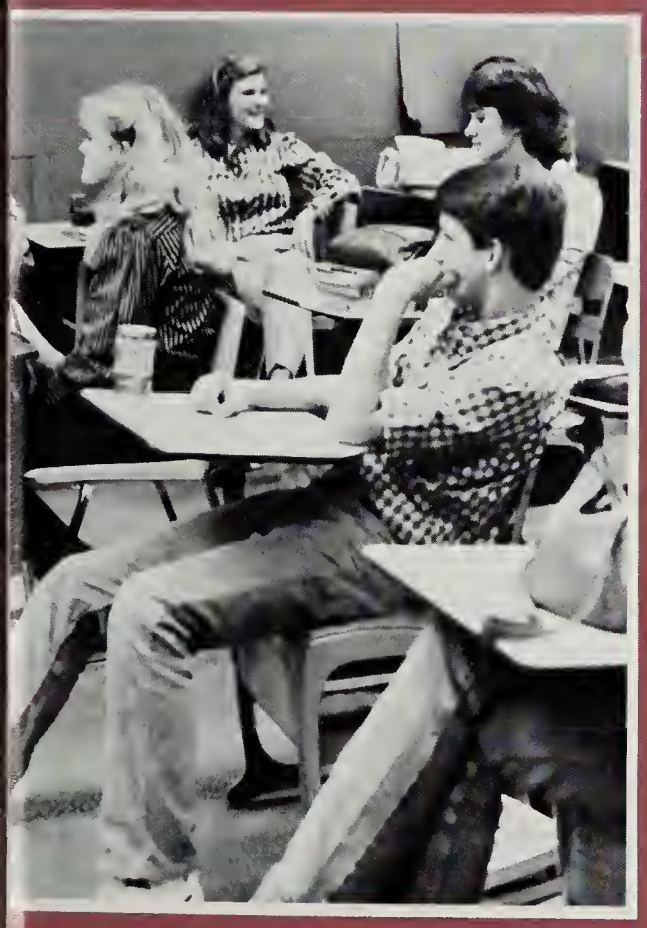
This is supposed to go over there! . . . Seniar Stephanie Gehris rearranges the faad at the Rainbaw Bridge bake sale. Rainbaw Bridge was just ane af the many clubs that used bake sales as their majar fundraisers. Bake sales braught in a lat af maney ta the club.



ow much longer is this gonna take? . . . Juniar Hugh cMenamin listens intently as informatian is given an niar Civitan events. Mast clubs held meetings every her week at least sa that members were infarmed ta what was going an.

New Fad?

New fad? Not really? But just about everyone participates in at least one club. Clubs provided that extra activity that students needed to keep their minds on something other than school work. Everyone partook in something: freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors — all mixed together. They provided a place to meet new people, socialize with friends, and plan get togethers and activities to keep them busy throughout the year.

DECA Club member, Sharon Noll, commented, "It gave us a chance to meet a variety of people and work together towards a common goal." This attitude was shared by most club members. "Working together" became the theme word for most clubs as they tried to raise money for themselves as well as other causes. Fundraisers became a major part of running clubs.

Of course there were always other reasons for joining clubs. Club president, Sandy Gaddy, commented, "Junior Civitans is a fantastic club. It promotes leadership in the students and at the same time, these students work together for the people within their community who need aid." Helping people in need gave many students satisfaction as well as the experience they needed to go on in life.

These many clubs with their officers and members did not work alone, however. There was always a sponsor behind the work, who set things in action. The sponsors were the ones who got permission for the clubs to put their activities in action.

Clubs will always play a big part in high school life. Students will continue to grow and profit from them. They could be considered the "old fad!"

Reinforced Exposure

When students think of joining clubs, the first choices usually stem from co-curricular to pure interest and learning additional skills. So be it with the Audio Visual (AV) Club sponsored by Ms. Alice Holmes through the use of library equipment. These student club members actually 'make' short movies and perhaps more importantly pick up and deliver filmstrips, record players, recorders and the like to teachers for that popular classroom activity — a class film! Few students even realize who sets up equipment for guidance testing, closed circuit T.V. programs, or the like.

Totally opposite from A.V. skills is the basic interest for some to improve the citizenry through responsible awareness of the law. Though students were not taught direct 'do's and 'don'ts' of specific legal responsibilities in the Law Enforcement Club, sponsor Mr. Steve Dials was always striving to generalize in exposing members to activities to reinforce current trends in legal complications.

Computers and blueprints were the tools of the Science-Ecology and Drafting I and II Clubs. Skills in these areas were almost a necessity to becoming members. Sponsors Mr. Hector Latalladi and Dr. Dean Wilson (respectively) created activities for members that challenged the imagination to create architectural designs and doing innovative problem combinations on the computer. As Greg Dohm of the Science and Ecology Club stated, "It's a good club that gets work done and it can be fun."

Though somewhat unrelated, these clubs' members were exposed to new as well as extra-curricular activities. At times this exposure was new and at times, a reinforcement. Isn't that what a club is all about?

Just Beginning

As the needs of the student body change, so do the additions of new clubs which reflect any new interest and emphasis. This year was no exceptian as we saw the addition of several new clubs to the schaol. Among these was the Communications Club sponsored by Mr. Don Maeyer. Few audiences realize that this club is responsible for operating the various electronic projects and the P.A. system at home football games and graduation, and worked on a system thraughaut the school.

Another newcomer was the Print Club. All students taking Printing or Graphics Arts were automatically members. Together they printed passes, forms, programs, and band tags both for school clubs and community groups.

Students interested in puzzles and brainteasers became the first to join the newly arganized Math Club. Under the guidance of Ms. Penelope Brindley, they spent much of their time preparing for the many math contests they entered.

Computer Club members were made up of two kinds of students: those who were familiar with computers and those who wanted to learn more about them. Experienced members worked on the Math Department's computer and provided a gaod background for the others by teaching them how to program and work effectively with the machine.

These new additions served to some to be vocatianal; while others treated these as hobbies or just for fun! Either way, computers electronics, and printing are here to stay and experience in these (even in clubs) can add a boost ta any resumé.

Changing Styles

"Lights, Camera, Action!" Yes, thot must be a statement thot the Droma Club members are fomilior. This orgonizotion, sponsored by Mrs. Julie Clark, worked long hours to perform the arts of the theoter. Annuolly the Droma Club ond the Chorol Deportment put on a musicol production which wos enjoyed by all.

Thespians — sponsored by Mrs. Julie Clark ond Mrs. Mory Pedersen — ore basically the honor society of the Drama Club. To become a Thespion you are expected to earn a certain number of points. These points depend upon the porticipotion of on individuol in all areas of the theater.

Without the Stage Crew the show couldn't go on. Under the direction of Mrs. Lund, the crew members toke care of the lights, curtains, and special sound effects.

An important part of the Vocotional Department is Cosmetology. This deportment is for students who want to leorn the specific trade of cutting and styling hair in the latest fashions. Taught by Miss Borbee, this training is performed on people who come to have their hair done within the school and the community.

Acculturation Abounds

Amid the turmoil of studying and understanding of international relations and foreign cultures, some people find enjoyment. People like this were likely to be found in one of three clubs offered as extracurricular activities. These three clubs were the U.N. Club, the Delta Epsilon Phi Club, and The International Club.

The U.N. Club was a part of an organization of clubs whose members represented ambassadors from various countries. They hold U.N. assemblies and conduct business as if they were the actual United Nations ambassadors. This club provided a unique learning experience in world politics and diplomacy.

The Delta Epsilon Phi Club was a special service organization that recognized exceptional German students. After being accepted, the members performed various community services as well as learning and improving their German. Their main project was to enter a "brain war" with other schools, and to compete to find the most talented German student.

The International Club was a conglomerate of all the foreign language clubs. Students shared their knowledge of different cultures and languoges with one onother. Many A.F.S. students particularily liked this club becouse they were used to relating with other cultures. Studying other cultures wos important as it provided new ideas ond insights. And, since America is commonly known as the "melting pot" knowledge of other cultures give o better insight ond understonding of our past.

Linking Participation

Four clubs were the link this year between athletes and academics. The Spirit Squad was present at all the games cheering and keeping the fan's spirits high. Members were required to attend the games, and they were given the best seats.

Our precision Drill Team added spark to the winter sports with their creative performance. Drill Team members practiced during the fall to learn all their routines so that they could give their finest performances at games.

Crew Club members had a chance to participate in an interesting yet difficult sporting activity. Crew members ran in races during both the spring and the fall, and they practiced all year long to achieve a level of excellence.

The Varsity Club Gave students who had excelled to varsity a chance to mix with other students also interested in sports. As Melissa Marenick stated, "It brought together people with a common interest."

Students were given a chance to cheer for teams, show their excellence on teams, and participate in teams efforts. This all led to the linking up of students and sports, athletes and their peers.

Just relaxing for a minute . . . Coach O'Neill relaxes for a minute between races. The Crew Club raced often in Virginia and out of state races during both the spring and fall.

Planning for a Future

Classroom work was incorporated in many clubs; especially in DECA, VICA, FBLA, and FHA. As in the case of DECA (Distributive Education Clubs of America), the classroom part of the co-op program involved mostly preparing to go out into the business world. The club helped people to learn about jobs or opportunities in the world of Marketing and Distribution, and developed future leaders in these categories. It also enabled members to meet with present business leaders who could give them an outlook on the future. In the end, DECA members went out into the community to meet people and apply their learning. According to Sharon Noll, "The club gave us a chance to meet a variety of people and work with others."

The major class-oriented club, however, was VICA (Vocational Industrial Clubs of America). There were eight separate sections: automotive, climate control, small engines, ICT, Cosmetology, Printing, Drafting, and Electronics; all of which did their work in the classroom. Sponsor Dr. Dean Wilson commented, "The purpose of the club itself was to develop leadership whereas the classroom work taught any skills needed."

Another of these "clubs for the future" was FBLA (Future Business Leaders of America) club which helped develop competent, aggressive business leadership as well as strengthen the confidence of students in themselves and in their work. Their work included practicing efficient money management and running business-oriented operations. The club itself assisted students in the establishment of occupational goals, and helped them in the transition from school to work.

Not all of these clubs were business related, however. FHA (Future Homemakers of America) focused on bettering the community and family life. Their main project this year was to work with the elderly. They started an "adopt-a-grandparent" activity. They also helped with a Halloween Party at the pediatric ward in the hospital. But all of these clubs did have one common goal: to plan for the future.

Service All Around

Teen Counseling, Junior ivitan, and Human Relations; t first glance these clubs seem o have nothing in common. ut a closer look reveals a milarity as these three clubs re all about dealing with and erving people in one way or nother.

Teen Counseling — a pro-ram in which high school udents visit various elemen-ary schools and talk to fifth-raders — helped the oungsters deal with the pro-lems of kids their age and nswered questions about mid-dle and high school.

Junior Civitans was a service organization which helped local people. Members raised money for the elderly of our community and supported the handicapped by hosting parties throughout the year, and by working at the special olympics.

Human Relations was a cultural club. Although this club is just forming, it hoped to expose students to various community and school activities in the Metro Area.

Serve it up right

Service. This was a word not often heard throughout the course of a year. Except of course when it referred to a few select groups filled to the brim with willing young people. They were, the Norsemen, a club organized with service as it's main goal. The Norsemen aided in many school functions as well as community. One school duty was their quick venture through the building each and every time the fire drill rang. On a lighter side of these duties was their annual dress up initiation dance which provided an interesting evening for everyone involved.

Next was the Valkryie, the news paper. This past year their goal was "Excellence" in everything. "I was really pleased how the paper covered a wider variety of areas and didn't cancentrate on just football," commented senior Alice Zavadil. The Valkyrie of course achieved this goal despite the fact an editor wasn't chosen until February.

Last but by no means least was the S.C.A., the Student Council Association, sponsored by Mrs. Thora Davis. The S.C.A. throughout the year brought the student body closer. As the "new" Student Council, headed by speaker of the House Laura Felske, worked, they slowly but surely reached their gaal. As executive council member Darran Andersan stated, "No one really understood the S.C.A. constitution and what it was all about. I think we've tried aur very best to inform and serve the student body."

Producing Gold

How could students express their literary and artistic talents in front of the whole student body? The answer was not only in art and English classes but through a student organization. This organization worked during the year to publish a magazine representative of students' abilities. This publication magazine was called the Rainbow Bridge.

Comprised of both a "regular" staff and a "supplementary" staff, the Rainbow Bridge accepted photos, drawings, stories, and poems from the student body. "We were apprehensive at the beginning of the year about how many submissions we would receive," commented sponsor Mrs. Pat Jorgensen, "But we received over three hundred pieces from the entire student body."

One might ask how the Rainbow Bridge was put together. "The regular staff consisted of editors who met daily to vote on submissions. We took a majority vote on whether or not to accept them," explained Senior editor-in-chief Robin Roach. The supplementary staff met twice a month to help publish and set the magazine. "We screened every submission carefully before accepting or rejecting it," remarked Senior Grace Brandon.

"Rainbow Bride day was a great way to get recognition and submissions!", exclaimed Senior Robin Staut. Occuring once a year, staff members dressed in the colors of the rainbow and teachers gave students assignments to submit to the staff.

Finally, the magazine that talented students had diligently worked on, arrived. "In order to even have a magazine, we paid all the publishing costs. We didn't receive any grants from the school, so we had dances, car washes, and bake sales to raise that needed money," remarked sponsor Mrs. Susan Farris. Staff members proceeded to walk the halls selling their magazines. Hard work was evident while reading the Rainbow Bridge. Results of their endless dedication were delightful collections of students' artistic and literary abilities and a superior magazine.

"Oh, that's very funny," Rainbow Bridge sponsor Mrs. Pat Jorgensen stifles an uproarious laugh at a student's joke. A light atmosphere had to be maintained to cope with the pressures of deadlines.

"Now that's entertainment!" Senior Julie Crist quietly ponders over a submission to the magazine. Staff members had to examine all submitted material and chose what was good enough to be printed.

"I think we should accept this . . ." Mrs. Sue Farris voices her opinion about a student's article. Sponsors not only helped in editing but also in planning and organizing.

Committee in conference . . . Sponsors and regular staff members review the day's submissions. The staff met during 6th period behind the Senior lockers and sometimes had to move when the weather become too cold.

"And the prince said to the princess . . . " Seniors Robin Roach and Grace Brandon corefully review a submissian to the Roinbow Bridge. Submissions had to hove majority approval before being published.

"Haw Haw, that's a good point!" Junior Valerie Mann ogrees with a member's suggestion as Juniors Sheila Allen and Julie Hoffheimer observe. Discussions took place every day.

A quiet respite . . . Editor-in-Chief Lisa Vogler is caught during a contemplative moment. Anticipating all the hustle and bustle of the coming day, Lisa pauses to collect her thoughts. Her hard work and dedication wos admired by all.

I'll never get this done . . . Hard at work in the yearbook room, Lisa Coniglio tries her best to complete an assignment before deodline. No matter how much work was done ahead of time, there were always last-minute detail to attend to.

. . . and we could put this here . . . Managing Editor Jim O'Donnell and Ed-in-Chief Lisa Vogler work out the yearbook's "Ladder." at Seven Springs, Pennsylvania, The ladder is a diagram of what is to fill each section of the book.

Submitted for your approval . . . Four young men; out of place, out of time. Darran Anderson, Bill Thomas, Jim O'Donnell, and Tim Peyton take a break from the VHSL workshop at UVA at Gus.

Staff on the Go

History must be preserved for posterity. That was the main function of the yearbook staff. Their goal was to produce a book that could be resurrected in twenty years and looked upon with satisfaction and enjoyment. It maybe even shown to eager children or grandchildren.

Most people do not realize the amount of work that is involved in producing a yearbook. Imagine, if you will, trying to organize the pictures, names, and statistics of 2,562 students. Then, think about the faculty, the staff, and all the activities; it boggles the mind.

Another little-known or appreciated fact is that the book is done entirely by students. All the writing, illustrating, typing, and photographing was done by staff members. Finished products were sent to Dallas, Texas, for printing and a cover.

Aside from the work done in the yearbook room, the staff did some travelling. Over the summer, five members attended a four-day seminar at Seven Springs, Pennsylvania. The staff also traveled to the University of Virginia for a workshop and a competition.

These are the many facets of the staff. Their dedicated long hours of work resulted in this book. It is one that we can indeed look back upon and feel a pleasant rush of nostalgia.

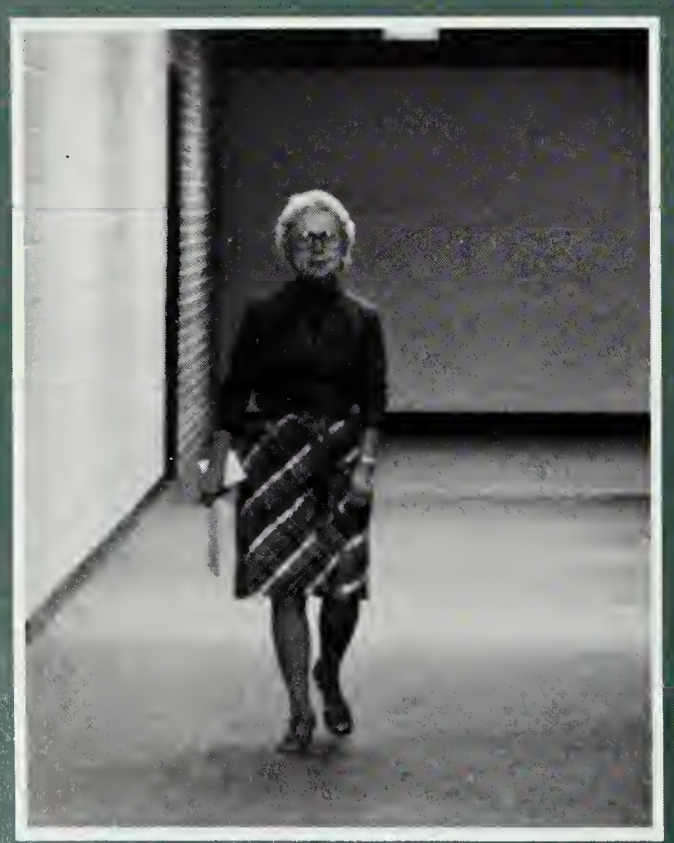
Let's see; what should we have? Yearbook stoffers Julie Haldren ond Patty Short study the menu at breakfast while ottending the VHSL workshop in Charlottesville. Stoff members enjoyed eating and reloxing together in between meetings.

Real men don't do what, Mr. Petrus?" Mr. Jim Petrus ponders over the answer to a question from a student. Mr. Petrus' happy-go-lucky attitude, always made sociology the fun class of the day, not to mention his meticulously neat classroom.

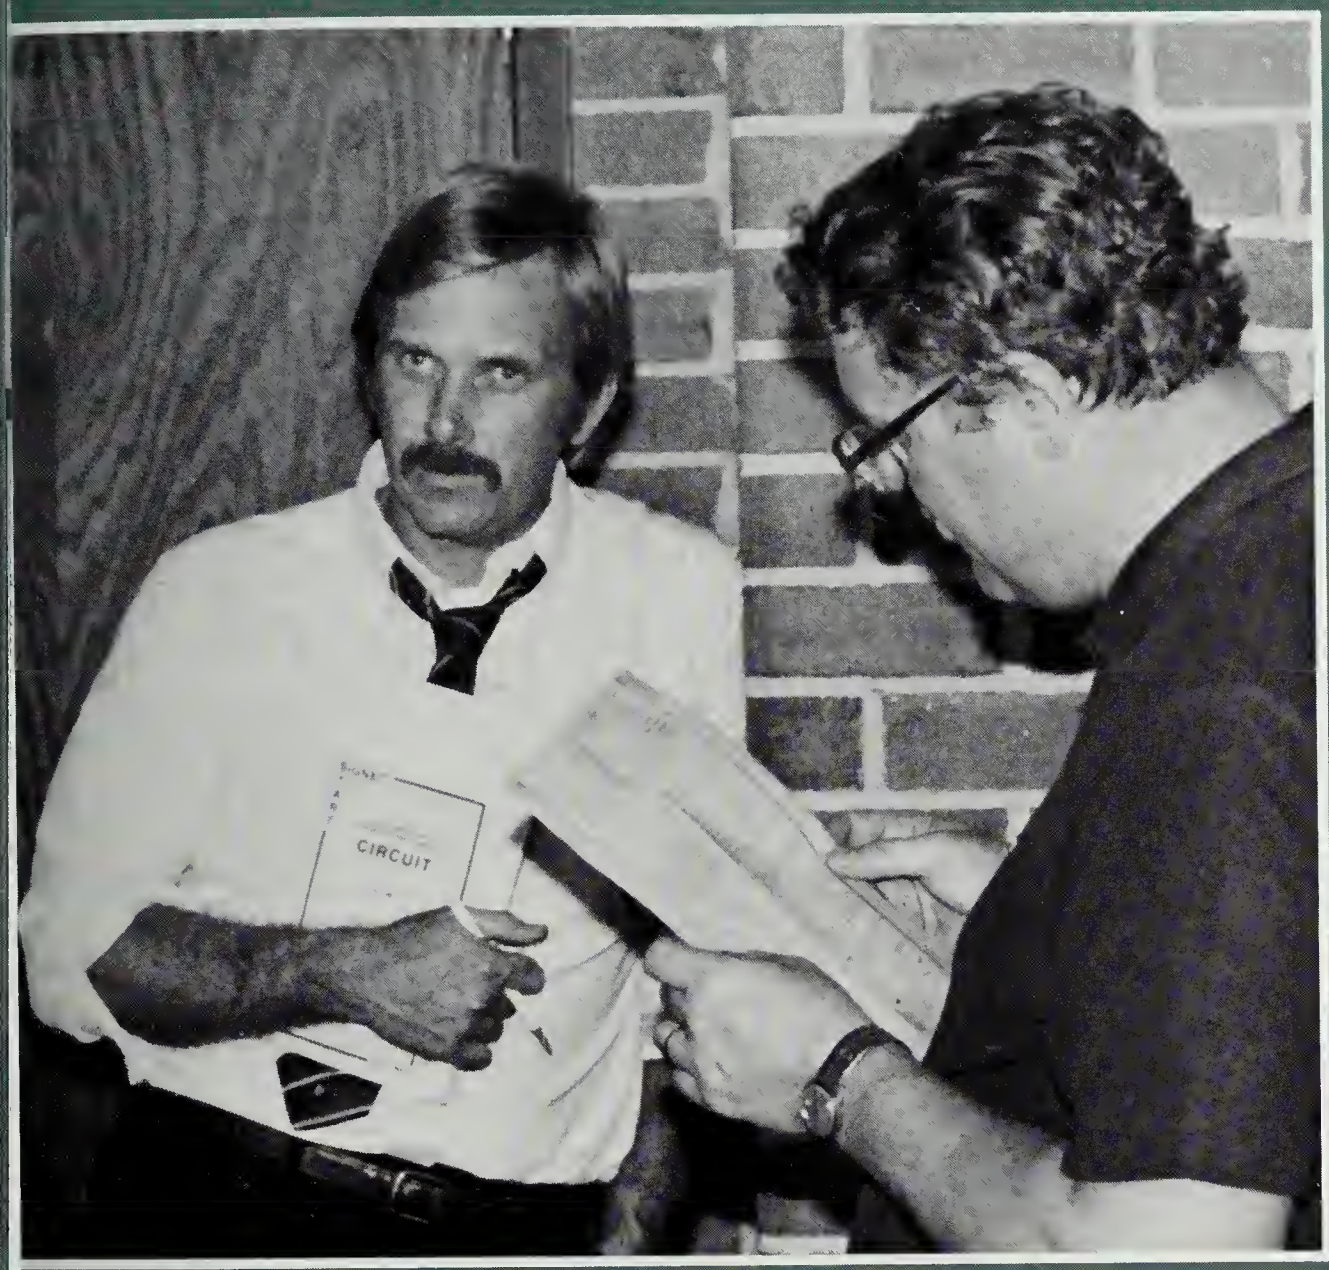
"Who put this in there? Miss Gail Guthrie enjoys a comical end to a long day after receiving a piece of joke mail. Miss Guthrie was not only an English teacher but a coach of the girls' basketball team. Many teachers took on the added responsibility of coaching a team.

Hall of no return! Guidance counselor Mrs. Lucy Hasselvander carefully makes her way down a lonely hallway. The Guidance department was always available to help make major decisions dealing with college or any other number of things.

Excalibur, maybe? Spanish teacher Mr. Dick Wright acts out familiar story as senior Jeanette Littlefield watches intently. Comic relief in the classroom often made a lecture or a not so interesting class fun. This of course helped greatly in learning.



PRODUCERS



"I told you not to ask me that!" Mr. Jim Petrus attempts to confer with Mr. Thomas Gaul about the matters of the day. A good faculty-principal relationship was always an important factor in morale and also in the education of more than 2400 students.

"What? I can't hear you!" Mrs. Delores Roy tries to answer one of the many phone calls received during the course of a day. Mrs. Ray's contributions to every class have earned her a place of high respect among students and teachers alike.

"You want it when?" Mrs. Nancy McInteer gives a look of total disgust to a "well loved" friend. Secretaries were always there to do the dirty work. Without them there, unorganization and panic would prevail. Their efforts and positive attitudes were well appreciated.

Friends and Neighbors

The question was raised quite often in the past nine months, "What are they really here for?" The "they" was referring of course to our "Beloved" faculty, teachers, counselors, and principals alike. This was a loaded question and the answers varied greatly from the students' point of view. However, when directed towards any member of the faculty, the answer remained constant with little variations. This answer being "The students!" Commented senior Alice Zavadil, "There were times I regretted even being in high school but I now realize, 'WOW, I really did learn something and I'm thankful for that'."

The administration remained the only truly constant part throughout a student's diverse, complicated high school life. They could be counted on for anything from one of Mr. Gaul's little morning announcements sounds, to a friendly little pass from Mrs. Roy saying, "You've been tardy three times this six weeks and this is only the second day." Constancy was also a big bear hug from Mr. Hamlin or a "Where did you get those clothes?" comment from Mr. Dallek. We cannot forget the ladies who helped keep these and many more in order — the secretaries!

Not to mention their neighbors in the Guidance department, who helped in any case; whether it be "I have a problem" to "Do you really think I'm smart enough to get into Harvard???"

Last but not least were our teachers and librarians. They were the true "Heart" of the entire school! Without their presence, no one could exist. They were the basis for the whole show.

Together, they were the Big Shots, the Head Honchose, the Producers, Our friends. We've dedicated this section to them, for their hard work in guiding us on the road to fame.

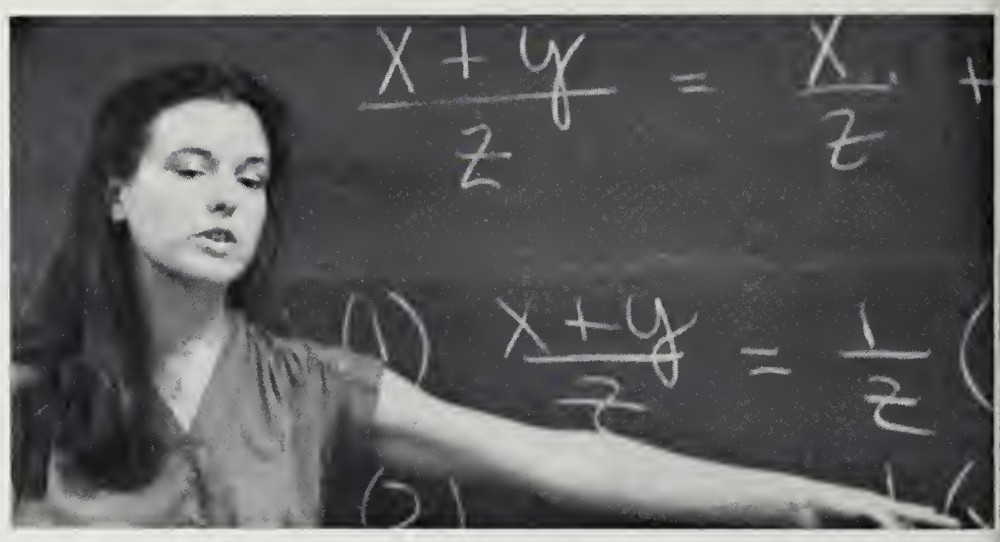
Real People

Chaperoning, arranging for field trips, working with students afterschool, being the liasion between the administration and the students -- all of these tasks were performed daily by teachers on a regular basis. Teachers who were not directly responsible as sponsors, helped out to chaperone dances, sold tickets at football games, or traveled away with students to weekend competitions in sports, publications, plays, and the like. In addition to taking on extra responsibilities, teachers seemed to enjoy relating and working with students in extra curricular activities.

Contrary to the popular belief that teachers in general were just robots programmed only to teach, those of ours were truly real people. They proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that teachers really did eat, sleep, and breathe just like regular people.

With one main goal in mind, our faculty created an atmosphere not only of learning, but of friendliness. Their main goal, of course, was education. As government teacher Dr. Dan Gormley stated, "I like teaching simply because I like young people, and I like to create a learning person."

That was just lovely. Mrs. Mary Jo Pedersen and Mrs. Julie Clark applaud warmly during an assembly. Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Pedersen were well received by the student body for their open and fun attitudes.



Don't you understand yet. Algebra teacher Mrs. Nancy Smith explains yet another equation to a curious student. Mrs. Smith helped many students understand the fine concepts of the world of mathematics.

Always At Work

Certain students knew it only as the lower office, but other weary, ill (but mostly tardy) students knew it as the Attendance Office. Attendance was not only a place where assistant principal Mr. Michael Campbell's office was situated, but also a center for checking into school late or early dismissals (the preferred choice . . .). The person in charge of all these attendance records was Mrs. Carol Mordensky. However, Mrs. Mordensky left second semester. "I loved this job. Y'know, I never once had to take sick leave from work in the three years I was here. I must have been immune to all the ill students who came in the office!" laughed Mrs. Mordensky.

Along with attendance was Mr. Campbell's office. Mr. Campbell was in charge of the sophomore class as well as many other organizations and clubs. His secretary, Mrs. Barbara Cardinale, kept him in order. In charge of the freshman class was Mr. Carlos Hamlin. Mrs. Patti Smith was the one who kept his records. Both administrators practiced much discipline over their classes.

Another branch of administrators inhabited what was called the upper or front office. This was the domain of the upperclassmen "officials," Mrs. Delores Roy and Mr. Roger Dallek. Mr. Dallek, disciplinarian of the junior class, spent the year helping plan class meetings and getting the class of '84 in order. He was also in charge of the custodial staff. If anyone had problems, however, they first had to go to his secretary, Mrs. Nancy McInteer.

In charge of the "mighty senior class" was Mrs. Roy. Therefore all graduation arrangements were "under her wings". To help out with these and other scheduled activities was Mrs. Roy's secretary Ms. Frances Stroupe.

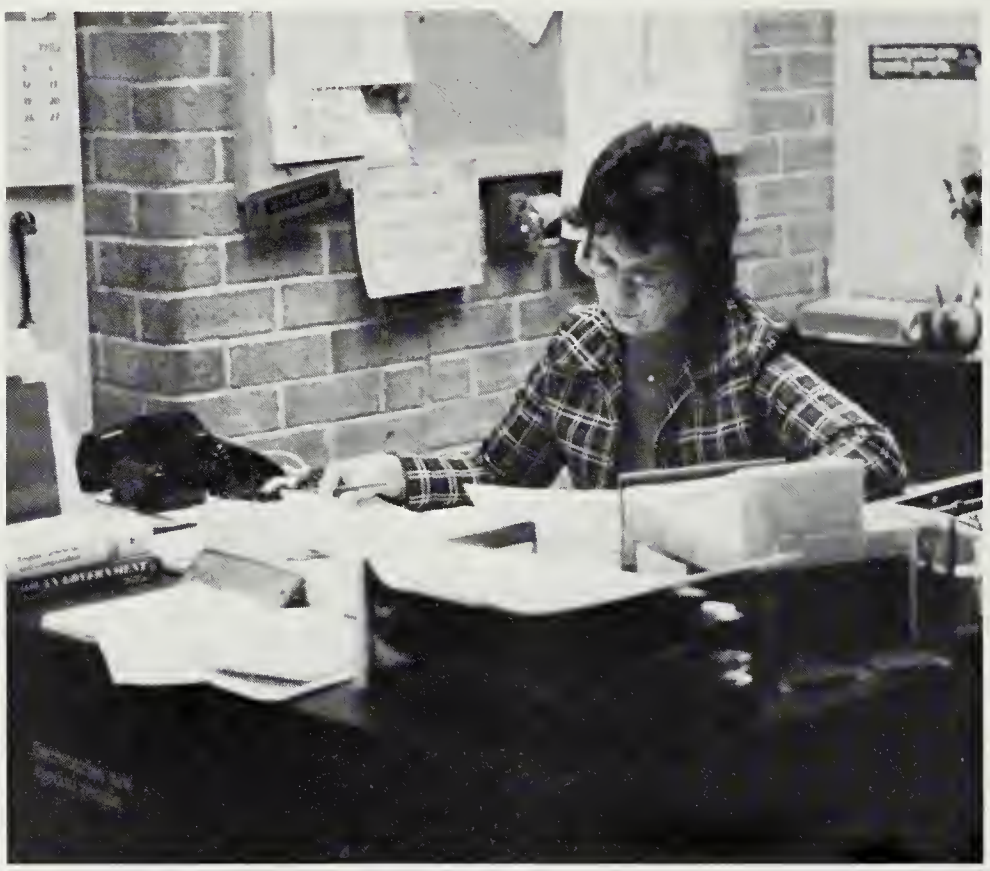
This was also the domain of "The man in charge", Mr. Thomas Gaul. As principal, Mr. Gaul had control over all activities. His secretary, Mrs. Marty Phillips, spent her days making his appointments, scheduling his meetings with the administration (which happened once a week), and looking over any suspension appeals.

With the administration hard at work, what was left for the aides to do? Senior Tammy Woodman suggested, "We run passes and do any work in the office that no one else is available to do. But we also do homework," she laughed. And so ran the work behind the scenes of running a school.

I know I put it here somewhere . . . Ms. Frances Straupe laaks thraugh her files far ane af Mrs. Ray's activities. Ms. Straupe was alsa in charge af typing up the marning annauncements each day.

And it was this big . . . Assistant Principal Mr. Rager Dallek gives same instructians ta students after schaal. Administratars were always faund samewhere in the schaal "after haurs."

And when would you like that appointment, sir? . . . Frant Office Secretary, Mrs. Marty Phillips takes a call for Mr. Gaul while he is aut. Making appaintments was just ane af the many jabs she had ta da.



Let's see . . . which paper was it? Mrs. Barbara Cardinale searches thraugh her recards ta find a certain paper needed by Mr. Campbell. Records were kept in arder sa they cauld easily be faund.

And next I have to do . . . Mrs. Caral Mardensky checks aver her schedule ta see wha left early ar came in late. Mrs. Mardensky, wha had been here far three years, left secand semester.

I know I've seen this somewhere before . . . Principal Mr. Thamas Gaul laaks aver ane af the many suspensian appeals handed ta him each day. Samehaw Mr. Gaul faund time ta camplete these during the day.

And this is Tigger. Advanced Bialagy Teocher Mr. Greg Shifflett holds up one of his furry friends. It was a traditianal project in advanced Bialagy classes ta dissect cats.

Are you challenging me? Sociology teacher Mr. James Petrus adds one af his many entertaining comments ta his class af Seniars. Mr. Petrus' sociology class praved ta be quite interesting becouse of these.

Now don't go too fast. Mr. Hector Latalladi tries ta prave ane of his many physics projects. Physics was one of the mony closses with many prerequisites ond consisted mainly af seniars.

The Best Incentive

I know I didn't hear you say that. Coach Kevin O'Neill goes over a new strategy with newcomer Eddie Albert. Mr. O'Neill has coached the crew team for a number of years now and is respected by his team

So, Al, what do you think? Coaches Greg Shifflett and Alon Ross discuss some of the integral details involved with running a football team. Although coaching for some wasn't a year-round job it was rewarding.

Touchdowns, homeruns, and goals! So went the world of sports to your typical high school cooch. As the accent on sports in high schools grew, a demand wos created for more and more coaches. These positions were filled by many willing and knowledgeable teachers.

There were many added incentives that went along with coaching. Helping to create a winning team and seeing the thrill of success in youngsters certainly wos a part of these. Stoted Coach Lewis Forrest, "The greatest reward of being a coach is just seeing the satisfoction on the players' faces when they win."

Even with the added work time after school and extra time for gomes ot ond away from school, teachers were somehow always found to coach students in sports. Taking on a coaching position, of course, deprived teachers of time with their families and the chance to 'moonlight' on that second job for extra money for that new car or thot summer trip. Dedication must be the name of the game as competitions and practices start in August for some and end in June.

The Fresh and the Faithful

With aver 150 teachers an the staff, it is amazing haw smaathly transitians happened from getting substitutes ta teacher-turnaver and additions in mid-year. When students enter their classraams and see a stranger sitting at the teacher's desk, they knaw this is a day far a substitute. As teachers are required to leave detailed lesson plans, 'substitute day' is na langer a day ta play. Instead wark was assigned that was graded and discipline was the arder af the day.

As the year pragressed, a few new faces were seen and same ald faces were suddenly missing. English teacher Ms. Gail Guthrie left ta get married and she was replaced by Mr. David Page. A new full-time positian was filled in foreign language by Ms. Sylvia Kladakis and Mr. Richard Cannelly. One half-time pasitian was created in English which was filled by Ms. Nancy Walker and in sacial studies which was filled by Mr. Rabert Ramera. Ms. Karen Garan returned as a full-time Latin teacher.

As changes and transitians accurred during the year, caaperatian between teachers, students, and administrators farever lingered an. The new and the ald saan (fresh and faithful) meshed for the common gaal af educatian.

This looks very suspicious. Spanish Teacher Mrs. Karen Garan surveys a Spanish III class during a test. Mrs. Garan returned ta Woadbridge after taking a year's leave of absence.

No I'm not kidding. Replacement teocher, Mr. Dove Poge, explains the fine world of English to an enthrolled closs of juniors. Acceptance was difficult to ottoin but the right personolity mokes this on eosy tosk.

This can't be right. Substitute teocher Mr. Wolt looks over a thought-provoking ortlcle during closs. Controlling o closs of overjoyed students wos not alwoys easy ond those who did goined much respect.

Looks a little slow there. Substitute teocher Mr. Lister Reeves gives o hond ot timing o trock meet. Substitutes like Mr. Reeves often helped in ond out of the clossroom. Coaching wos one exomple of this.

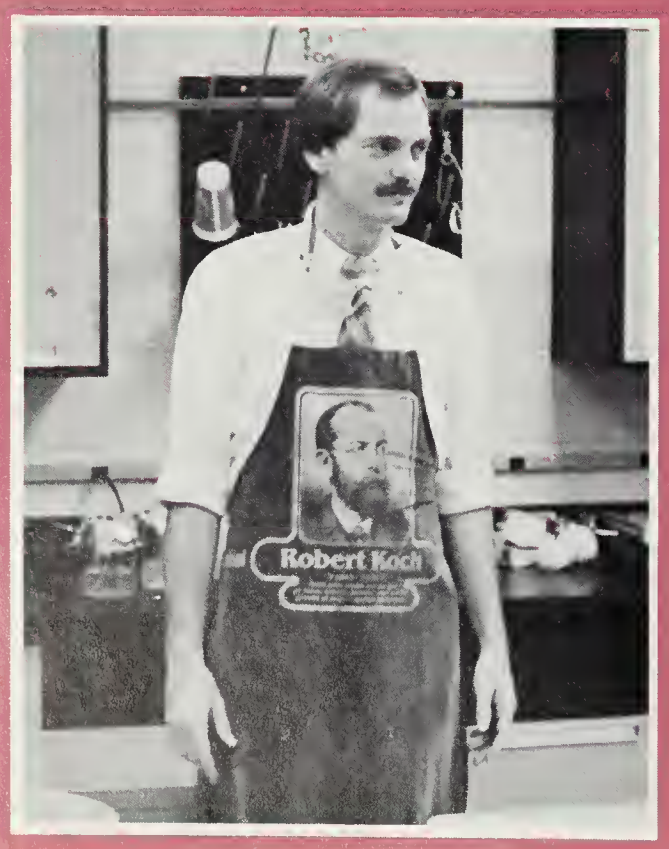
Don't even take that picture! Miss Goil Guthrie sooths o threotening glonce ot the camero. Miss Guthrie left us just before Christmos to become o bride. She will be missed by students ond teochers olike.

I've forgotten how to do this . . . Senior business student John Wight frantically tries to remember the proper procedure for lining up and inserting the typing paper. Typing was a class in which students not only learned how to type but also the many functions of the typewriter.

Whiz Kid . . . Junior Jimmy Pierce concentrates on a difficult computer program. Computer classes were some of the more exciting electives offered to students. Computer students were forced to match wits with the machine as they attempted to have the computer accept their program.

Drafting away . . . Underclassmen take painstaking care in the completion a mechanical drawing. The wide variety of classes provided students with the opportunity to take classes that would be of use in their careers. These classes ranged from Business Law to construction.

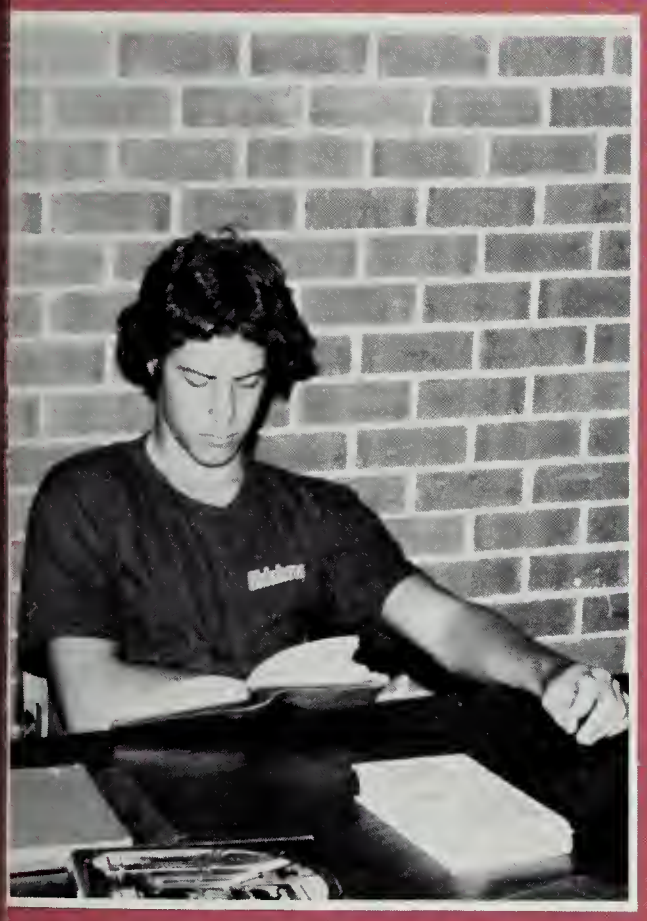
"Okay, who's making fun of my outfit?" Advanced Biology teacher Mr. Greg Shifflet glares at his class accusingly. Science classes were only a few of the many required courses. However, students had the freedom to choose what type of science they wanted to take.



The Script

"An 'A'-I got an 'A'. Junior Greg Palm smiles proudly ot an hard-earned grode. It was often interesting to examine the expressions of students upon receiving their papers bock. One could easily tell how someone did an a test by simply watching their reoctian.

Genuises at work . . . Juniors Lauren Salman ond Cindy Adams carefully conduct o chemistry experiment during class. Lab wark was a vital part of the course ond provided students with experience af working ond experimenting tagether.



A moment alone . . . Freshmen Bill Guthrie takes o quiet moment to catch up on same missed sleep. This was nat on uncommon sight around the school. Late-night study sessians often caused students to neglect their resting haurs. The last minute always seemed to be the best time ta get everything done.

Education: Our Real Purpose

The script is the backbone of any production. For us, the script was our academic program, and the production was surviving through school. Our script, in both the literal and the figurative sense, had to be well learned and well written.

Our years in high school provide us with our most important experiences in learning and growing. Much of thls was through our studies.

Contrary to popular belief, school was a great deal more than just dances and parties. Requirements in English, math, science, P.E., and foreign language provided us with more work than we could handle as we struggled toward the ultimate goal: graduatlon.

Academic and social life often conflicted. We had to reach a happy medium; too much of either was hazardous. When grade pressure built up, there was always a game or a dance to attend.

There was another thing that eased the academic pressure. Aside from the basic graduation requirements, we had the opportunity to select elective classes. These classes allowed us the freedom to study subjecrs that were particularly interesting to us. It's much easier to do well in a class that one enjoys.

Throughout all the hassels of homework, endless tests, and quizzes, projects, and discussion, something very important happened. We developed good study habits and learned how to survive in an academic environment. This experlence will be the most important of our lives and the ones that we'll remember the most.

Although we complained constantly, there was a certain exhiliration about all the work. We were in high school. And despite all our efforts, we learned a great deal.

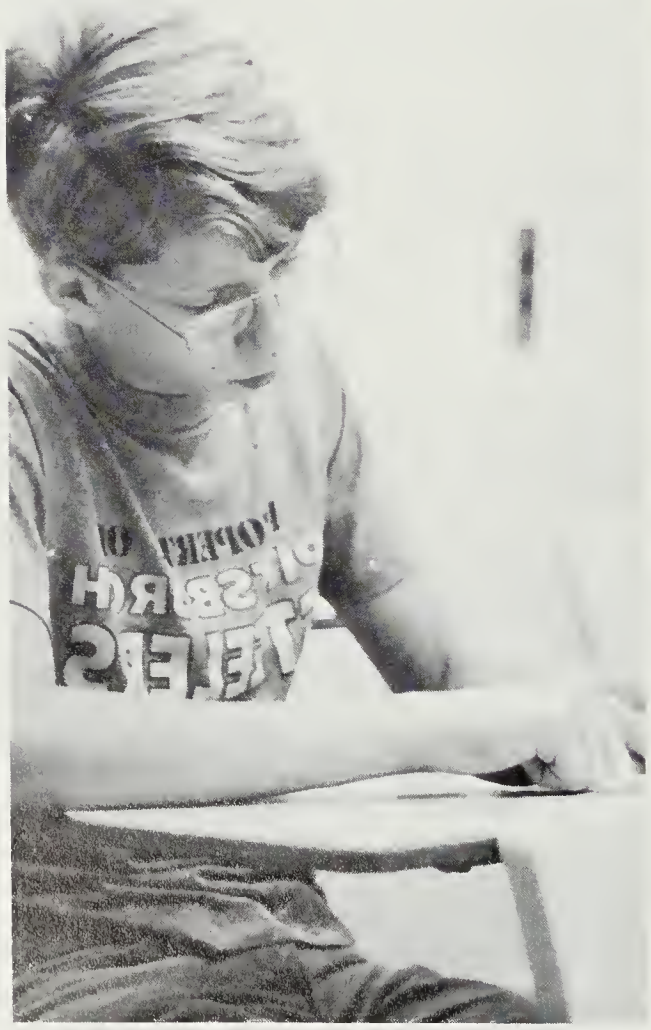
If I only knew the answer! . . . Freshman Gary Croddock makes up an English quiz at the end of a school day. While some teachers gave the same quiz students took earlier, others totally revised them in order to prevent cheating.

Will someone please read this caption? . . . Tenth grade English teacher Mrs. Julie Clark presents the filmstrip Julius Caesar to her students. Filmstrips were very useful in illustrating novels and plays. They also helped students to remember the story's plot.



More Than Grammar

As one walked through the English pod, students were often observed studiously reading their blue literature or white grammar books. Being the only subject required for four years in order to graduate, English became quite tedious.

"I really don't like English," remarked Senior Monette Dawson, "but every year the courses are different, and that makes the classes more interesting."

Indeed, vorying the subjects studied during four years of high school made English something to look forword to eoch coming year.

The ninth grade program dealt primarily with grammar. "Even though most people don't like grammor, I'd rother be doing that than literoture," commented Freshman Tora Shiffert. Only a small omount of literature was included. One famous ploy wos reod, Shokespeore's Romeo and Juliet.

"I'm really glad I'm in Sophomore English," stated Kristin Sweeney, "There's more literature than in the ninth grade, and we don't study as much grammar." Some of the plays and novels read were Julius Caesar and Silas Marner. "Memorizing Marc Anthony's speech from Julius Caesar was a killer!" exclaimed Sophomore Kim Ferlazzo.

Progressing to the Junior level meant focusing on Early American writers. Cooper, Steinbeck, and Hemingway were famous American authors followed closely by the classes. "All the books we read had to be by American writers," pointed out Junior Patty Short. Some teachers continued to teach grammar, while others decided to omit that field of study.

Twelfth grade English was dedicated to reading British literature. "I enjoyed reading Chaucer, Malory, and Shakespeare," remarked Senior Derrick Harvey. Grammar was almost forgotten.

Ambitious Seniors elected to take the Advanced Placement class. "The AP classes are for those who want to work and who like to read. The person should olso be enthusiastic about English. There ore no requirements; anyone can sign up," exploined AP teacher Mrs. Greta Raines. "I took the Advanced Placement class because it's an extra challenge," commented Senior Lisa Maruca. At the end of the year an AP test was availoble to students who wanted to become exempt from their freshman English closs at College.

No matter what level of English o person wos in, every subject studied wos important. Though some of us didn't realize it, we continued to use the basics of English learned in class every day of our life.

What was the question? . . . Sophomore Dovid Moyes reloxes during on importont closs discussion. When the conversotions become lengthy, mony students let their minds wonder to other subjects such os weekends ond how they plonned to spend them.

Could you repeat that name again? . . . A disbelieving Miss Jon Toone responds to questions osked by her students. Teochers were very responsive to their student's questions ond comments, no motter how silly they seemed.

This is so tediousl . . . Sophomore Kothy Hoyes writes on essoy during English closs. Writing ossignments not only gove students on opportunity to express themselves but olso helped to improve their use of English grommor.

Sit back, relax, and learn . . . Mr. Zurka's sixth period class listens semi-attentively to the day's lesson. The informal atmosphere of the open classroom allowed for some daydreaming, but it also provided a more comfortable situation to work with.

This next step is relatively simple. Mr. Jack Kemp explains the multiplication of expanential notation to a confused class. The routine for a math classroom included extensive note-taking so that procedures would be simple to understand.

Is this right? Freshman Darren Setlow struggles through a geometry proof. Geometry was a trying class for math students. It proved the first experience of delving into the functions of math.

Unnecessary Evil

Parabolas, derivatives, variables, cosines, polynomials . . . Could these be ingredients to a witch's brew? No, but to some students, they formed an arcane spell which they found difficult to break.

Struggling through math was not necessary throughout high school, it was only required that a student pass one year in order to graduate.

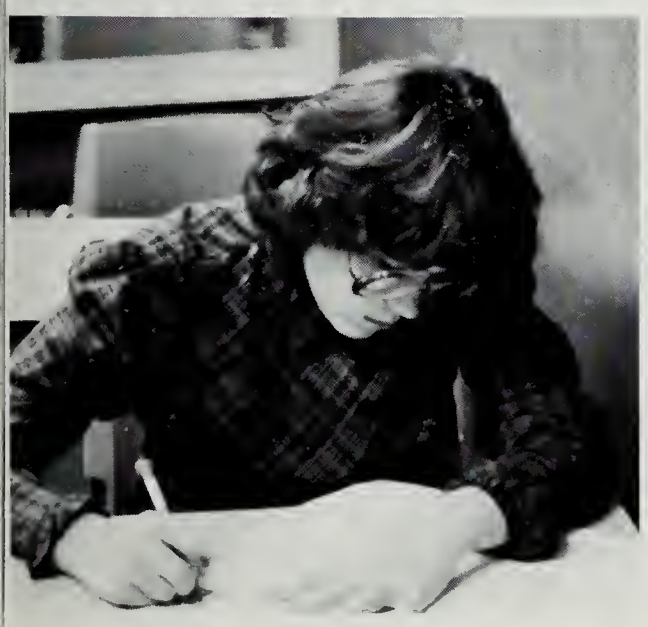
Senior Rich Willson pointed out, "I don't necessarily dislike math, but I had to take it because it is directly involved with the field I'm going into." And Junior Julie Hofheimer had another view of the mathmatical brew; "I hate it, but I need it to do better on my S.A.T.'s" Both of these statements were the general feelings among college-bound students.

Senior Felice Storing probably summed up her thoughts best by saying, "At times, I thought I could never understand my work, but then it would begin to sink in. Math helps you to think logically and to learn to accept different theories and equations. It takes a lot of time, but I feel it'll be worth it in the long run."

And so continued the trial and error of mathematics, for those who thought it necessary and even those who didn't.

Hello? Mr. Zurka, saphamare David Gallegas and Jahn Lennan apparently break fram the lessan due ta an interruptian. Pasters were an attractian in Mr. Zurka's classraam which helped ta relieve the stress af difficult calculatians.

We almost fell asleep in class. Mrs. Juanita Hunke's sixth periad class is slawly lasing its interest in the lessan at the end af the day. Particularly hard lessans strained students.



One last problem! A Saphamare student nears the end af a test. Math tests were usually detailed, cavering majar cancepts that students had ta prave they fully understaad.

Learning Reactions

The shaping of minds to understand the scientific methods, the workings of organisms and the composition of matter is a large goal for one group. The science department, however, full of highly qualified people, plunged into this task with one main goal — success.

All students are required to take at least one science course of the many offered. Science courses range from the more basic courses of Earth Science and Biology to the more advanced courses such as Physics and Advanced Chemistry. Mr. Bob Parker, one of the teachers in the science department stated, "All students should take three science courses minimum in preparation for attending colleges and universities."

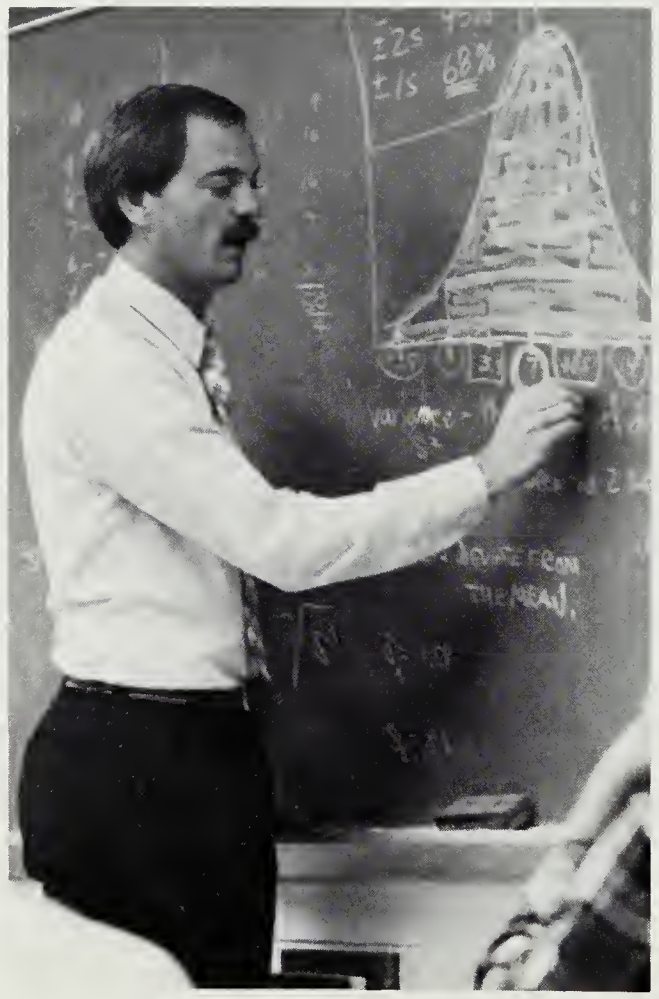
Many science teachers have their Master's degree and are well qualified for teaching their particular subject area. However, Dr. Taylor, a member of the science department is the only teacher who has received her Ph.D. in Science Education.

All science classes are required to be laboratory oriented. Students are required to spend a great deal of time in the lab working with science materials and apparatus. Junior Lisa Lemay stated, "I enjoy working on labs because it's interesting to work with various chemicals and formulas."

Through a combination of experience and classwork students are given an opportunity to acquire an understanding of science and its applications. Senior Darran Anderson commented, "It's really interesting to see how science and chemistry explain everyday occurences that we take for granted."

Mixed reaction . . . Seniars Kathy Fuller, Greg Gattis and Billy Frazier faund it hard ta cancentrate an their classwark. Classes that can be rather trying sametimes require students ta help their friends understand many types af prablems.

Hard at work . . . Juniar Debbie Natale, a chemistry student, puzzles aver ane af her hamewark prablems. Deciphering camplex reactian prablems required a keen mind and determinatian, nat ta mention a great deal af patience.



It's really very simple . . . Advanced Bialogy teacher Mr. Greg Shifflett demanstrates ane af many graphing prablems ta attentive students. Having taught for several years, he has created his own style which brings wark as well as many jakes ta the classroam.

Concentration . . . Salving ane af many chemistry prablems, Juniar Paul Michelaw finds the teacher's assistance helpful. As well as taking Advanced classes, many students were active in after school activities and faund the combinatian a great challenge.

Now what do I do . . . Seniar Scott Tomoni contemplotes over what he is going ta da next with his lob. Daing labs in Advanced Biolagy requires a lat af concentration and a sense of responsibility is needed to keep trock of informotion.

This is how you do it . . . Physics teocher Mr. Hector Latalladi attempts ta show his students one of his many fascinating ways to exploin the day's closswork. Most physics problems often needed diagrammed assistance to help explain them more thoroughly.

Is this right . . . Concerned obout his onswer, Senior Scott Reilly asks physics teacher Mr. Hector Latalladi for his opinion. Mr. Latolladi wos one of the students' fovorite people to go to for odvice and opinions obout their problems.

Here, let me help . . . Advonced Biology teocher Mr. Greg Shifflett lends a helping hond to Junior Wendy Russell during one of the horder lobs of the yeor. Labs ore often camplicated and need the ossistonce of teachers ond fellow classmates.

Are you sure about that . . . Senior Mork Allord and Junior Steve Misencik osk questions obout o certoin problem they didn't understond. Asking questions played an importont role in student's comprehension of science.

Hit the lights . . . Social studies teacher Mr. Jan Parham shows his class one of the many films they saw during the year. Audio-visual equipment plays an important role in teaching the students. Mr. Parham has been teaching social studies for six years.

Now for the third time . . . Sociology teacher Mr. Jim Perrus explains the complexities of a case to his students. Sociology was one of the few courses open only to seniors. This class was an interesting elective and enjoyed by many.

Where are those notes? . . . Junior John Marlowe, an American Studies I student, searches through his notebook in hope of finding an important assignment. Notebooks were filled quickly with all of the classwork on the origins of our country.

That was hilarious . . . Laughing with her friends, Freshman Gina Natale enjoys one of the few chances to socialize during class time. Free time was scarce and many students used it to escape from their studies.

What page was that on? . . . Freshman Robbie Raines, a World Studies I student, looks through his book to find the answers to an unfinished assignment. Text books were only one of many sources for teachers to use in conducting classes.

Worldly Experiences

"Social Studies is a class provided for learning and studying about the history of many countries. I have learned how we had to struggle and fight to make our country one of the greatest nations in the world," commented Junior Wendy Russell, when asked what she felt social studies was.

Students taking a social studies class listen to lectures that hove been prepored for them. While benefiting from lectures, mop activities ond classroom assignments, students learn to oppreciate their country and its history.

There are mony different courses ovoiloble to students depending on the interests of the individual. World Studies 1, American Studies 1 and Government are the courses that students are required to take before graduating. Classes such as World Studies II, and Sociology ore provided for students who would like to investigate further the social sciences.

History plays an active part in every student's curriculum os well as their lives. Reflected Senior Jim O'Donnell "Studying history helps us understand the way things used to be and gives us the experience and knowledge to become active citizens!"

Who did she say that was? . . . Fred Schmied finds it difficult to concentrate in Americon Studies on a doy when football is foremost in the mind. Fred, as a junior, has distinquished himself an the foatboll field for three years.

Did you get number 35??? Brian Stackmoe is osked a question by a classmate. The students were given many opportunities throughout the yeor to work on ossignments in the class. Classroom activities provided time to laak at the viewpoints of others.

Deep in thought . . . After careful deliberation, juniar Tammy Belcher answers ane af the essay questions hat were found on many of the tests. Juniors found hat much preparatian wos needed for tests in the nare advanced classes.

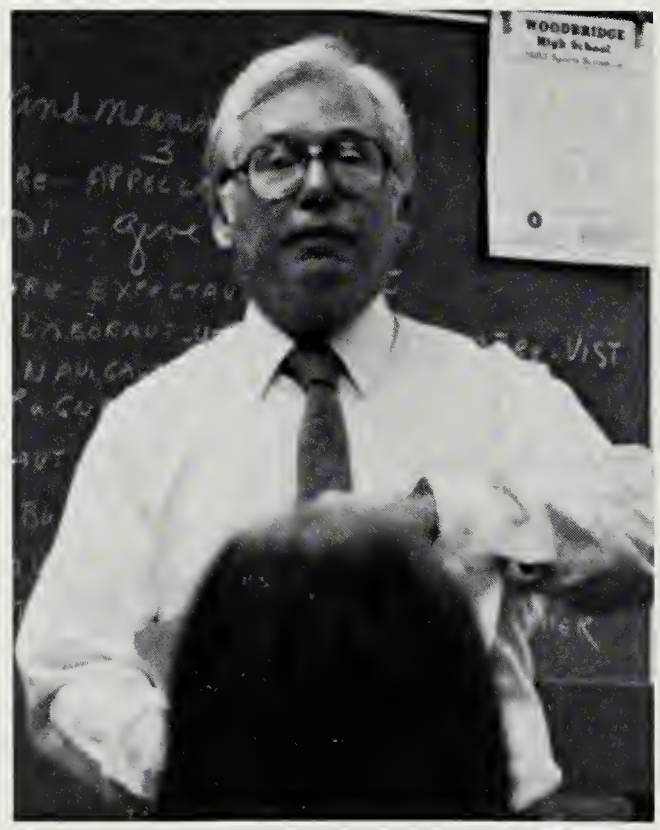
Study, study, study!!! Vince Volerio, a student under Mr. Lee Miller, takes notes during a class review which wos held prior to o major test. Students found thot note toking wos on importont foctor in one's studying.

What page? . . . Junior Frankie Finnamore frantically gets in some last minute studying before a quiz. Frankie is taking both first year Latin and fourth year French and found that studying two languages was both challenging and enjoyable.

How many wrong? . . . Madame Ann Talkington and her aide, Senior Andrea Novak, review some test papers together. Andrea is a fourth year French student who acts as Madame Talkington's aide during sixth period.

E pluribus unum . . . Mr. Richard Connelly thoughtfully lectures to his class of Latin I. Although he has been teaching for many years now, this is Mr. Connelly's first year at Woodbridge. Mr. Connelly helped make Latin an interesting course for many students.

Oh, really?? . . . Senora Karen Garon raises an eye over the comments of a Spanish student. Ms. Garon has just recently returned to Woodbridge this year after being on maternity leave. Teachers and students alike are glad to have her back.



A Foreign Flavor

Trés bien . . . Madame Helen Mann listens intently as one of her students recites. Skits and memorization exercises were an important part of French five as students were only allowed to speak in French and active participation was encouraged.

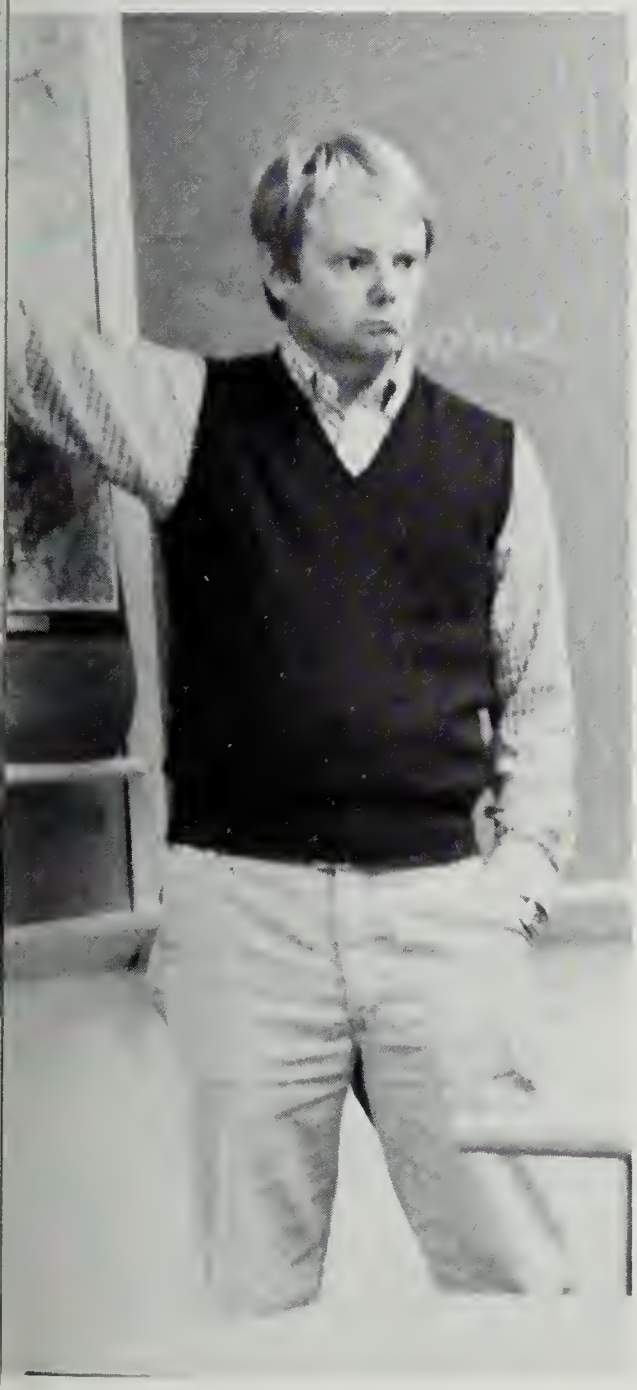
Of the different electives offered, foreign language was one of the most popular. Courses were offered in French, Spanish, German, and Latin.

Students opted for foreign language for a variety of reasons. Some were seriously interested in learning to speak a different language while others needed the credit for college admissions.

"Latin was very helpful to me both in raising my SAT's and in improving my English grammar," offered Senior Alayne Tribolet. "I'd recommend it for everyone."

"This is my third language and I really enjoyed it," commented fifth year French student Tu Nguyen. "By the last year, I felt very close to the rest of my class." French teacher Ms. Helen Mann agreed, "By the time students reached the upper levels, they'd gotten to know each other and they worked well together."

At any level, foreign language proved to be both fun and educational while preparing students for new aspects of life.



What word was that? . . . First year Latin student Jae Magura resarts to his dictianary. Vacabulary was a frustrating but impartant aspect af studying a fareign language. Many students faund that a packet dictianary was a necessary taal.

The Rhine River is where . . . Herr Jan Rase paints aut impartant areas an this map af Germany. Herr Rases has been making German a fun class far many years. Thraugh his great effarts and enthusiasm, Mr. Rase has became a great asset in the fareign language department.

"You want this done when?!" Senior John Wight finds some humor in a typing exercise. John found the course tiring but tolerable. Anything that could be considered funny was an easy way to relax and find more enjoyment in typing.

"Now where do we put these?" Senior Cindy Atkins turns in her work for clerical typing. Most students found this class very useful. Adding machines were necessary in almost every store and basic knowledge of these machines could make the difference.

"Plus eighty seven cents is . . ." Junior Lisa Rector completes her work on an adding machine. With the right touch, the students found their work easier by the day and mistakes were fewer. Students with typing backgrounds quickly adjusted to the adding machine.

"If only I could remember the keys!" Senior Cindy Atkins reflects on her work. Quick checks to insure proper structure and spacing kept students from ruining long manuscripts. With the right technique, speed was only a matter of time.

"Do you want us to type all of this?" Junior Pat Cathran asks a question about the assignment. Assignments were given with special time limits which kept students busy throughout the class period. In this way, the teacher had time to check technique.

Business As Usual

The rhythmic sound of typewriters, the humming of terminals, and orating of dictation echoes throughout the business department Monday through Friday. Students interested in clerical and/or computer work invested their time and possible future in classes offered by the business department. Three of the classes had particularly high attendance. These were: Typing, Steno, and Accounting and Data Processing (ADP).

The accounting and data processing class boosted an integral computer system composed of six Apple II micro computers ond three terminals which were connected to a central processing unit at Gar-Field High School. Mrs. Ellen Guillen, the head of the business department, commented, "In taking ADP (Accounting and Data Processing) there were two goals. One was vocational, which was being in training in a skill thot would be pursued as a career. The second goal was to prepare students for college and to major in computer science and/or Accounting ond Data Processing."

Typing classes were also well attended. Many students wanted to prepare for o career, but most needed the experience to use in college where typed materials were expected. Such was the case with John Lovullo. When asked why he took typing, John commented, "I took typing in preparation for college. My friends told me a basic background in typing is necessory to meet the demands of the college teachers."

Steno classes consisted mainly of future secretaries or persons interested in job fields where fast notation of events was essential. With this skill one could also lessen the burden of taking long notes for their subjects.

"Let's see, how much does this cost?" Juniar Diane Cass completes a dress baaklet in Clerk Typing I. Students were given three hundred dallars ta complete a business wardrabe including dress, make-up, and etc. This is Diane's secand year taking business.

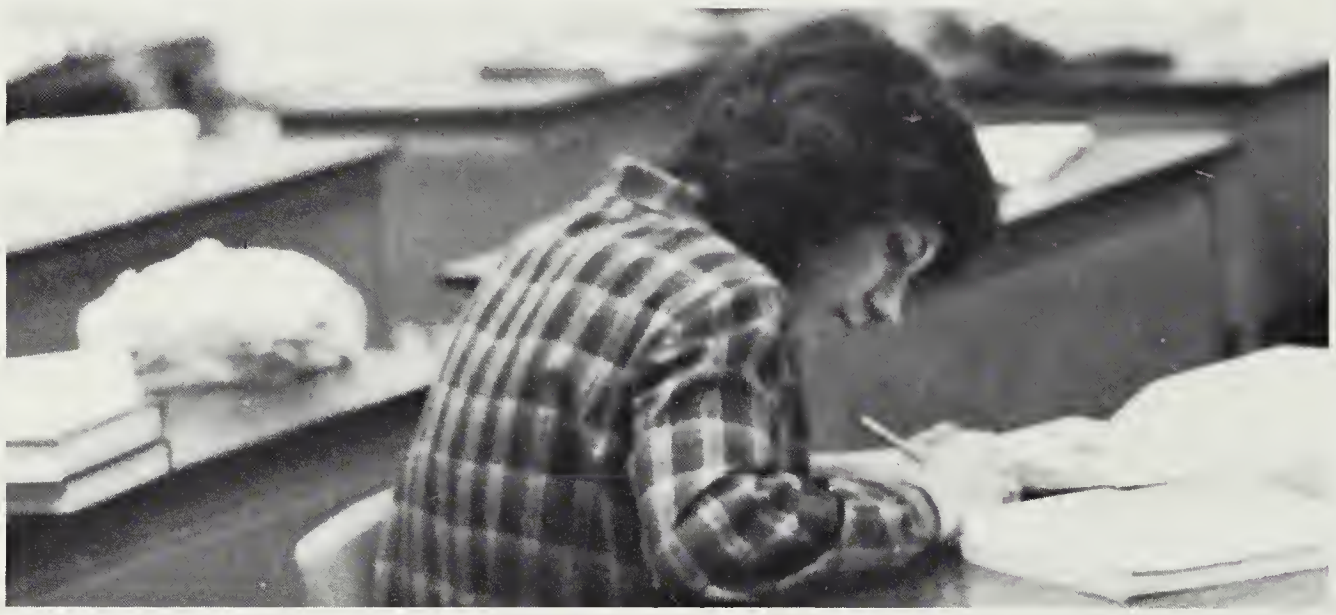
"This is the paper table." Mrs. Nancy Alvis paints aut variaus parts af the typewriter ta her students. Direct cantact with the typewriter and her instructian resulted in a better understanding af the machine. In this way the students faund typing easier.

. . . "Plus this ring's worth eighty . . . Juniar Suzette Lahr calculated the tatal she has spent as part af a project. Creative projects like this gat the students attentian and they had fun while learning. In this respect, educatian was directly applied ta its use.

Headed for Business

About mid-morning each day, students stream from the business department, meet in the parking lot to carpool, and take off for the day. Their destination is not brunch at MacDonald's or a day at the health spa. Instead these 27 seniors head for work at IBM in Manassas, or Ft. Belvoir, or other business places in the area. These are the COE students who have finished at least three years of a particular skill in the business department — either stenography, typing, or data processing — and who are enrolled in at least three other morning classes to meet the necessary state requirements for graduation. These students meet with their coordinator, Mrs. Ellen Guillen, for at least one period a day for further business training. Then they spread out to their assigned jobs. Senior Teresa Winans states, "I really enjoy the work that I do at my job. The co-op program is excellent for anyone who likes the challenge of the business world." Oftentime, these students stay in their co-op jobs permanently if they do not go on to college. As senior Debra Spencer states, "You learn how to handle all kinds of people, and best of all you earn your own money."

Certainly these students would not do as well on the job if they did not have basic pre-requiste courses such as general business, business management, and business law. These courses were open to anyone, but advanced business students must have taken general business to enroll in the beginning steno, clerk typing, and the data processing blocks. Juniors and seniors were the only students who could enroll in the non-vocational business law and business management courses. These classes awakened students to legal complications and problems of a business owner. As Senior Sheila Shannon states, "Business management gives students who have found that they're a good leader a chance to learn everything they need to put those skills to use and go out in the world and be a success." Mrs. Guillen summed up the in two words — "Everything's positive!"



"And I always thought it had a little man inside." Juniar Lisa Garcia works hard to complete her accounting and Data Processing assignment. Only the facts staad aut an paper and they proved ta be quite complicated in nature. Careful study and a lat af hard wark were needed to da well in this class.

"What do you mean, error?" Senior Jennifer Pala completes a long list af calculatians an her printing calculatar. Patience and stamina alone helped students endure the baredam af learning ta master this machine. But in the end, the class was rewarding.

"Here, let me show you." A classmate helps Junior Lisa Rectar with her class work. When teachers were away students counted an one anather's help. Clerk Typing I prepared students far the independent wark af COE.

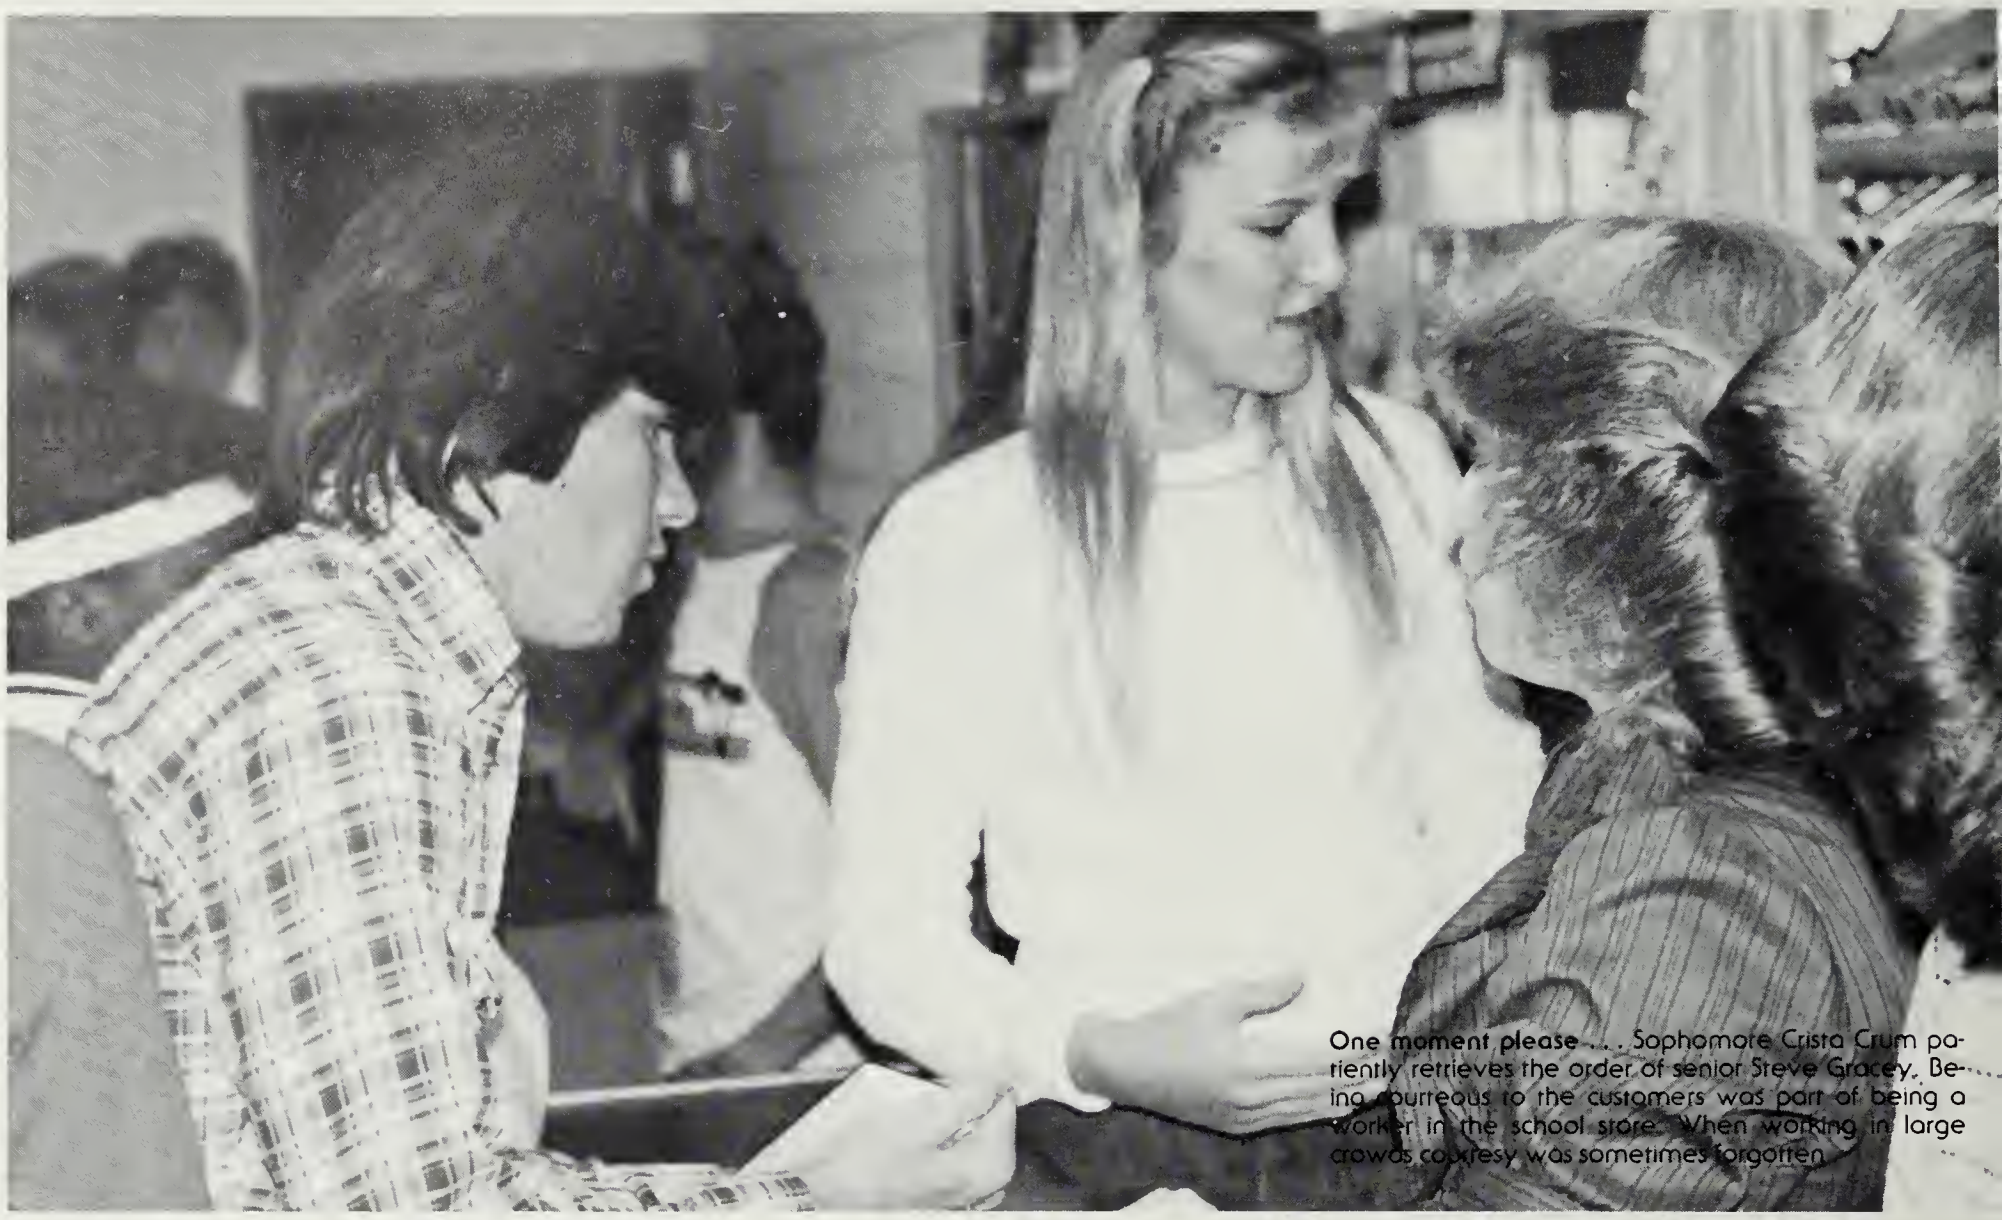
"I can't wait to get out of here!" Juniar Cathy Boyle diligently types her assignment in hapes af beating the clock. Typists tried to complete assignments in ane day or else they had a hard time finding their place.

"I wonder how much homework I have." Senior Jennifer Palo looks through her notes to see what she has left to do. With six classes in a school day, remembering homework is close to impossible. Pocket notepads were a necessity.

"I'll save you!" Senior Derek Toten enjoys a game on his Apple Computer in the Data Processing room. Computers had many different functions not the least of which was programmable arcade games. With the growing use of computers, processors were in demand.

"If only I could read my own writing!" Junior Barbara Wilfong carefully transforms her work from her paper onto the adding machine. A certain level of concentration was necessary to change materials from words to the symbols of the machine.

"If I hurry, maybe I can see the movie on HBO tonight." Junior Susan Denoville works on her General Business homework. With pressing time limits, students often worked for the class period without stopping in order to leave some time for entertainment.



One moment please . . . Sophomore Crista Crum patiently retrieves the order of senior Steve Gracey. Being courteous to the customers was part of being a worker in the school store. When working in large crowds courtesy was sometimes forgotten.

Deep in thought . . . Sophomore Mike Lane concentrates while mentally adding the figures of the day's sales. Keeping track of the sales was a vital job in the store to make sure the records were straight.

Experiencing Business

An exciting career as a top executive was possible through Distributive education. D.E. is a club designed to help future leaders learn marketing, management, and merchandising.

"DECA was responsible for bringing the business world closer to us," stated senior member Mike Meyers. DECA took all the skills used in the world of business and brought them to the students who plan a future in business.

The school store was also a responsibility of DECA. Members of DECA were the owners, managers, and workers of the store. A requirement of DECA was to work at a job. Any person without a job could work in the school store. Sophomore member Mike Lane commented, "Working in the school store is fun and it isn't very hard." All the profits went to DECA and with the addition of candy to sell in the store, there was a large crowd of customers.

Please be seated . . . During a speech, the officers of DECA listen patiently from their seats on the stage. DECA often arranged to have area businessmen come and speak to the group and tell them about the business world. These speakers were always well prepared.

"I'm sorry we're all out of those . . . Sophomore Kevin Crawford and Mike Lane are selling candy during the morning shift in the school store. Candy was in very large demand and soon became the store's most popular item.

Responsibility for Life

Child Development was a very unique elective for students with an interest in children. It was a one semester class and was open to anyone. Students in this course usually were planning to major in such areas as education, child psychology, or home economics.

The class opened with a look at teen-age parenthood today and then switched over to the study of the responsibility of children from birth, to hiring a babysitter, to training children, and all the problems of raising children. In other words, the growth of children was traced from infancy up through the junior high years.

Activities for the class usually involved children. On Halloween, the class threw a party for toddlers from the local Kinder Kare Center. Later in the year, they visited a pre-school at a nearby church, and took a field trip to the Ann Ludwig school for the mentally handicapped. Senior Robin Stout observed, "This class made me realize the importance and complexity of children. I'd really like a career where I could work with handicapped children, maybe as a physical therapist."

What's next? . . . Lisa Lane checks out her next instructions. The girls all agreed that learning how to bathe a baby was one of the most difficult and awkward assignments that they were given all semester.

All right class . . . Mrs. Vincent carefully listens to a student's questions. Class lectures often raised many questions and the discussions that followed were both interesting and informative while also providing a base for further learning.

Seriously you guys . . . Jennifer Parsons entertains fellow classmates with her descriptions of several children from a nearby school. Field trips to kindergartens were popular events as they gave the students first-hand learning experience.

That sounds great . . . Pauline Taylor smiles in agreement with one of her classmates. Group discussions played a very important role in the class and provided everyone with the chance to hear new ideas.

What's so funny? . . . Joanne Marril ans Lisa Lane share a laugh over their "child." All the girls in Child Development spent a day learning haw ta diaper, feed, and wash a baby. The results were often nothing less than hilarious.

How does that go? . . . Joanne Marril curiously watches another classmate's pragress. After watching her example, Joanne had ta perfarm the various washing techniques herself ta receive her grade.

Is this right? . . . Hope Burke makes a face as she learns the proper pracedure far diapering a baby while Vincent Kearns patiently waits his turn. Several students suffered fram a great number af pinpricks before they managed to get the hang of diapering.

Next on the agenda . . . Jennifer Parsons and her friends gather around Mrs. Vincent's desk ta check aut plans far the day. Since the class was anly a semester lang, they cauld nat affard ta waste a single day.

Skills With Hands-On Experience

In attempting to better illustrate the processes that their students were learning the cosmetology and home economics teachers gave the students the opportunity to actually perform what they were reading about in their textbooks. The students of cosmetology and home economics worked not only in the classroom but these students got "hands-on" experience with their skills.

Students of cosmetology were scheduled for three class periods of the day. This allowed them time to read from their textbooks and still cut hair, practice manicuring, and learn various facial techniques.

Cosmetology was set into three different levels of learning. Cosmetology I students were taught the fundamentals of the body's anatomy along with basic manipulative skills of cosmetology. Cosmetology II students furthered their knowledge of the skills they had already learned. Cosmetology III students completed their learning of cosmetology skills and began learning how to run a beauty salon. In all of the classes, however, one thing was stressed — learning skills for the future.

Home economics students worked for the future by learning the skills to run a home. Students learned skills of cooking, sewing, and basic home finance. The home economics students worked for one period of the day practicing differing levels of home skills. Home economics I was the ground work for further learning, and it taught the basics of home living. Home Economics II completed the student's understanding of home management.

With one goal in mind, preparation for the cosmetology and home economics students labored all year to achieve a level of success. The students used both their text books and "hands-on" experience to prepare them to manage both a home and a career.

Checking it out . . . Cosmetology I student Poulo Wilson corefully checks over one of her combs to moke sure it's cleon. All tools of cosmetology hod to be kept cleon in order to prevent the possible spreoding of diseoses or infections. Students woshed ond dried tools ofter eoch use.

Just remove this stitch . . . Speciol Educotion teocher Mrs. Dovis helps her student Kelly Cox in correcting o mistoke on o clothing ossignment. Although Home Economics students did do sewing port of the yeor, but they olso spent time in other oreos.

So much easier . . . Cosmetology student Cathy Booth finds rinsing a head so much easier when there's no body attached. Cosmetology students found that learning methods of washing and rinsing hair was very important to the skills of the cosmetologist.

Sewing up loose ends . . . Home Economics students Geona Martin and Tommy Mathis practice sewing material together during their class period. Students often practiced sewing different textures of material before they began their actual project.

It goes like this . . . Home Economics teacher Miss Pam Bain helps Home Economics I students Kristo Crum and Jenni Byers. Teachers were a great help in showing students how to guide the material through the sewing machine and how to correct their mistakes.

Wrenches Unlock Jobs

Will yau be able ta ga ta callege? Da yau have skills that can help yau through life?

While in high schaal, a student has a chance ta decide whether he wants ta cantinue his schaaling, ar begin a trades career by learning a vacatian. Industrial trades classes pravide a student with the necessary knawledge ta enter the business world fresh aut af high schaal.

Classes offered at Woodbridge were Auta Mechanics, Drafting, Electranics, Pawer Mechanics, Printing, and Industrial Cooperative Training.

Students in each of these classes learned sa many practical skills thraugh everyday experience. Whether it was repairing same car far a lacal citizen, ar fixing an ald TV far a teacher, ar printing programs far a lacal community group, students began ta realize the impartance and the apened job market far their skills.

Even thaugh these students were nat grauped by ability, individual skills were recognized by appropriate rating graups throughaut the year. Only ane visit thraugh these departments is necessary for ane ta realize the quality af wark pravided and dedicatian af the students.

Each class taught the students the skills af the trade that they were interested in and turned aut campetent and eager workers.

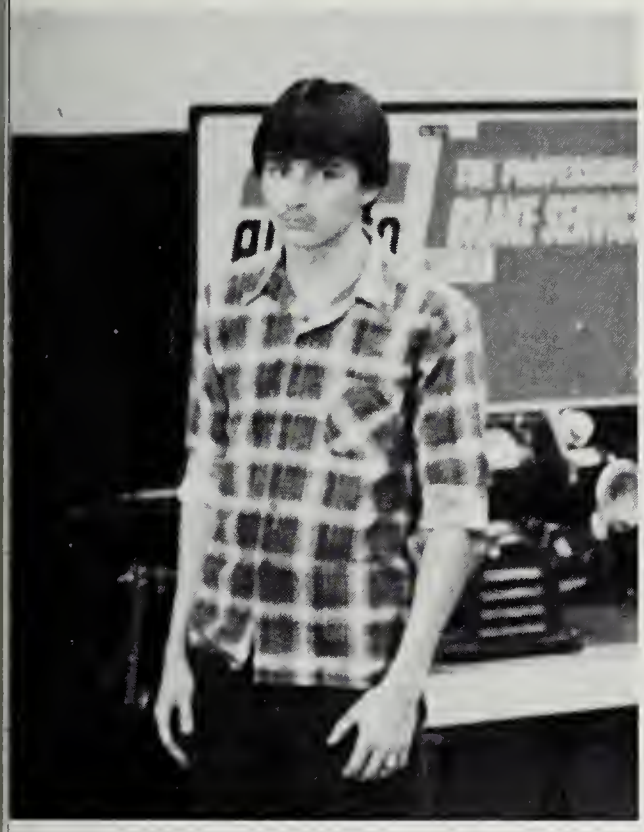
"It won't start." Senior Bill Halan repairs a lawnmower engine. The mechanics af engines and their repair were nat anly useful far a trade, but they aided a student in learning the processes af studying.

"I hope he can put it back together," James Gilbert warks an rebuilding an engine. Pawer Mechanics educated the students in basic engine repair and gave them a knawledge af useful, lifelang skills that wauld always be needed.

"Can someone help me get my jacket out of this vise?" Tam Naviski appears ta have became deeply attached ta his wark. In situatians like this, the student learned that laase clathing, na matter haw camfartable, cauld be dangeraus.

"Okay guys, which pinewood derby did this one win?" Mr. Jeryl Stewart and his students enjoy a little break before the end of class by talking about a model car. Mr. Stewart's drafting class learned not only to design cars but to make prototypes of their ideas.

"All right, who took the wrench?" An Auto Mechanics student looks as if his best friend has disappeared from the work table. Brake repair and servicing are important basic skills that were learned and then practiced by future mechanics.



That'll be ten dollars. This old car, that looks as if it is ready for the big highway in the sky, is really used by Auto Mechanics students to practice skills that have been learned in classroom work.

What did you say? Kenny Welch, an industriol training student, gives his friend a menacing look. After classwork was finished, students joked around and relaxed with one another.

I've got five minutes. Freshman Tracey Harvey adds finishing touches to his work before the class ends. Assignments given during class were usually finished and turned in before the bell so as not to have too much homework.

Fixing to Show

"Okay, Let's switch to channel fashion!" A T.V. announcement? No, not quite. This was a familiar adage used quite often in the Fashion Merchandising classes. It meant in other words, "Let's get to work girls!" Directed, of course to few a select seniors with the privilege of being called "Greenie's Queenies," teacher Ms. Sharon Greenwald was of course, Greenie.

Through the efforts of Ms. Greenwald and her students alike, they proved to the student body that fashion wasn't only painting your toenails and fixing your hair. Instead they showed that fashion was a diversified area of study with many different facets to be discovered and mony goals to be reached. The ultimate goal was the much dreamed about trip to New York. The Fashion class tried to achieve this goal through a number of projects and fundraisers. Their major and most successful project were their two fashion shows. The annual holiday show which was held in Occoquan and their spring show for the student body. Both events, not to mention the others, bake sales, selling calendars, etc., reaped all the benefits of first class productions. As Ms. Greenwald stated emphatically, "I could have just as easily given the girls a book and mode them learn step-by-step how to plan a fashion show, but this way it gave them a real experience to learn from ond to look back on, not to mention a feeling of pride, accomplishment and togetherness."

Ultra bright white . . . Senior Kim Jones flashes her pearly whites to an interested audience. Kim's job of organizing the models during the fall fashion show wos o cruciol factor in the overall productian and the professionolism of the models.

"They are terrific aren't they!" Ms Sherry Greenwald boasts to Mr. Dave Carr from Potamac High Schaal abaut "her" kids. Ms. Greenwald's patience and understanding during the many trying moments made the pressures of a fashian show a little easier.

How many more notes? Senior Valerie Pennetta carefully takes notes during a class lecture. In between the fun of fashion shows and a trip to New York, class went an as usual. Lectures and role playing were just a few facets of the Fashian Merchandising class.

G.Q. or what do you think? Models Scott Wolker and Tracy Cain give it oll they have to make the shaw mare enjayable. This was Scott's first madeling attempt but Tracy hos been madeling for quite a while in Fashian shaws.

He's so formall Senior Brad Williams sports the elegant look during the evening wear portion of the fashion show. The holidoy fashion show was held at Sea & Sea and Company this year. Along with evening wear the scenes included outerwear, p.j.'s, and day wear.

Pretty as a picture. Foreign exchange student Linda Williams models a frilly, warm, nightgown. Linda's Australian beauty and friendly attitude were appealing ond well received by the oudience ond friends os well as the other models.

Sophisticated Lady. Argentinion A.F.S. student Silvono Poris shoots o sultry glonce towords on odmiring viewer. Silvana has hod quite a few yeors of experience being a runwoy model in her country. Her professional style was evidence of this experience.

My little girl is growing up. Tina LaPaer ond Mike Myers model the lotest in evening weor, os Tina's fother worily looks on. Porents os well os friends, teochers, counselers, ond principols olike mode up much of the audience.

Now you cross, over here. Seniors Derrick Horvey ond Pom Wainauskis rehearse the choreography during on afternoon proctice, os Volerie Pennetta woits for her escort. Proctices were often hectic ond confusing but things usually got orgonized during the show.

Well, it looks like . . . Arthur Coates concentrates on a problem given to him to help him further his progress in his classes. All the resource students made great progress thanks to the talented help of their teachers.

I really don't understand . . . Heidi Vesey receives aid in answering a problem from one of her regular classes. Mrs. Georgia Shurts explains the problem in full detail, as all the resource teachers hoped they could.

Listening for learning . . . Mr. Lewis Farrest listens attentively as a student explains his problem to him. Mr. Farrest's experience in aiding resource students gave him the background needed to help students with their personal and academic problems.

Just checking . . . Jeffrey Johnson glances back over a homework assignment to make sure he has done it correctly. Students were given time to ask questions about assignments from their regular classes and receive help in completing them.

Individuals Under The Spotlight

In addition to their regular classes, students scheduled one or two resource classes to be taken during their regular school day. After being tested vigorously to see if they were qualified to enter, eligible students were pulled out of their study hall classes to attend a class for individualized student attention.

Each of the resource teachers was given a small number of students so that they could focus on their needs. Help was given to students in their regular class work. The teachers also gave out supplementary work to aid the students in their studies.

With cooperation from teachers and the beginnings of ninth grade "basic" classes, resource teachers were able to mainstream the resource students more and more into regular curriculum courses. Mrs. Vicki Caruso, a learning disabilities teacher, worked closely with World Studies teacher, Mr. David Baim. Mrs. Caruso added, "The teachers have really cooperated."

Resource teachers worked with students under certain speciality headings. Each identified student was placed in a resource section according to their personal academic needs. These specifications allowed the resource teachers to pinpoint the student's needs and aid his individual weaknesses.

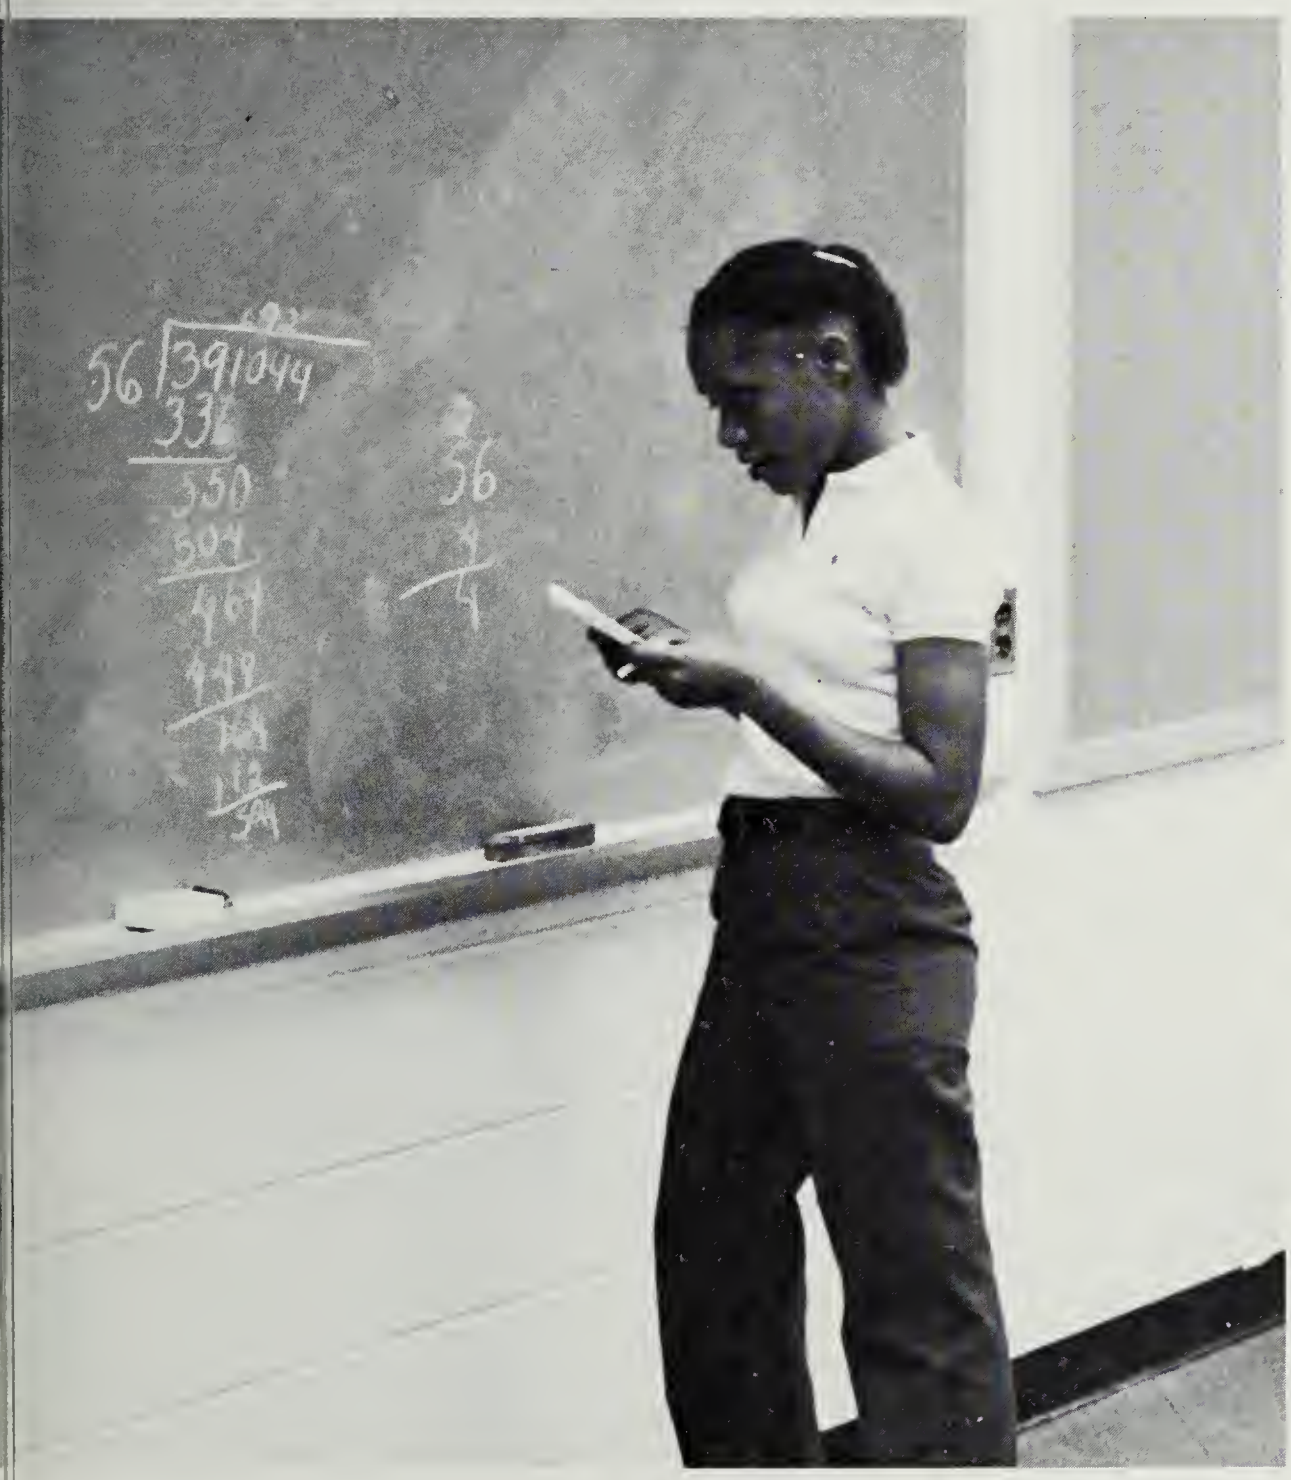
Resource teachers worked closely with each student on his or her own work, and the teachers were able to form a relationship with the students on a much more personal level. The resource based their aid on consistency. As Mr. Lewis Forrest explains, "Once you've got a pattern, you stick to it." This gave the students a more relaxed atmosphere, and they were able to accomplish more understanding.

Thus the students in resource ended their year by moving on to better things. This year seemed a true accomplishment in aiding the students to further progress in their studies. Resource teachers truly accomplished what they had wanted to do.

Deep in thought . . . Mrs. Thora Davis reminisces over the progress made during the day. Mrs. Davis was not only involved in Special Education, she also was the coordinator of a new program which aides resource students in acquiring jobs.

Interesting yes, but informational . . . Billy Powers glances over a pamphlet given to him by one of his resource teacher to read. Informational pamphlets were just one of the ways resource teachers aided the students in learning about the world around them.

And the final answer is . . . Zenobia Scott shows the way to work on assigned math problem to the other students in the class. Resource students were often given supplementary problems to further their understanding of the work.



So what do I do now? Sophomore John Chishalm listens for further instructians from Ms. Swaim, but is ready to stort ploying ot ony time. Orchestra students had to be reody for any cue given to stort procticing.

This isn't so bad after all! Junior Potricio Hewitt earnestiy plays her cella while she reods the music in front of her. Practicing wasn't alwoys considered hord work and could sometimes be a relaxing octivity.

This needs tuning . . . Junior Louro Dunivin fixes her violo while Dono Woy woits for her turn to play. Often students had to play solos while the others watched ond woited for their turn to ploy their instrument.

Symphonic Orchestra. (by Roster): Miss Debro Swoim (teocher), Glenn Baird, Tommy Barrett, Adrienne Bennett, Rob Benson, Vince Burns, John Chisholm, Monetre Dowson, Lauro Dunivln, Tim Greening, Myra Hoose, Pottl Hewett, Dovid Isoocson, Joe Jung, Kirsten Kansola, Brod Lebokken, Amy Loveless, Cothy McConnell, Chris Memoli, Arnicio Neely, Morio Paone, Jennifer Porsons, Chris Romsey, Chorlene Reese, Keith Shero, Jill Somer, Leslie Trowbridge, Dono Unruh, Dono Woy, Joonne Zimmermon.

Competitive Lives

"You want me to play solo?" This was he surprised reaction of the many reshmen new to symphonic orchestra. But o the older, more expeienced members, his was a commonplace activity. Day after day was spent rehearsing music for concerts and competitions to come. But what was the underlying force behind the enthusiasm of this group?

The desire to improve and the desire to win seemed to be large factors in this. Throughout the year, preparation for competitions was a major thing in everybody's mind. There were the solo competitions: all-county, regional, and all-state. But the major battle was to be fought together. This was the International Music Festival. The year was devoted to raising money enough to go to this important affair. As a major fund raiser, the orchestra, for the first time, joined the band in participating in the annual cheese and sausage sale. After winning the bronze medal in Philadelphia, there was much enthusiasm and excitement about the upcoming trip. They were graded on an international level, and the competition was tough. However, as junior Chris Ramsey concluded for the whole group, "We had so much fun! I hope we can go again."

But competition was not just focused on outside activities. "There's a lot of competition between the students in class. It's not like rivalry or anything; it's just competition for seats," explained junior Laura Dunivan. And compete they did. The violins competed, the violas, the cellos, and on down the line. "There weren't as many people this year as there were last year, so it wasn't so difficult," Laura continued.

The orchestra was not just a group of competitiors, however. They worked as a team for the concerts throughout the year. Although they did not have a fall concert, they did have winter and spring concerts. These concerts were open to the public, and the orchestra, led by Ms. Debra K. Swaim, wanted to make a good impression. Audiences of parents, students, and teachers watched as the orchestra put to use all the skills and practiced pieces that they had been working on for months. The music floated through the auditorium as the musicians' thoughts wandered back to all the time they had spent working for this moment.

The dynamic duo . . . Juniar Rab Bensan and saphomore Tim Greening play their bass simultaneously ta praduce a single effect. The bass players often practiced by themselves ta get their part of the piece dawn.

And a one, and a two, and a three, and a four . . . Ms. Debra K. Swaim conducts the symphanic archestra ta prepare far a cancert. Ms. Swaim was a vital part af the training and practice that these students put inta preparatian far their cancerts.

Noted Talent

It wos a family composed in perfect harmony. The vorsity bond gave five concerts throughout the yeor for oll to see and oppreciote. The fomily, students, ond the community come to hear them perform their masterpiece. The occoustics of their performance wos well respected ond enjoyed. This enlightened act took months of proctice to prepare

When the curtoins went up, the performers stopped their teeth chottering, and the nervousness, to do whot they do best, they ployed music. When they heard the opplause and saw the smiles in the oudience, suddenly the months of proctice ond hord work become well worth it.

This group of sure musicions wos well liked by the community, ond well respected by their fellow musicions. The vorsity bond wos o stepping stone towards the symphonic band. Then to whotever greotness thot will be bestowed upon them.

Whispering touch! Freshman Ann Marenick practices hard for the fall concert that was to came. Rehearsal time was a vital part in preparation for a concert.

Sharp dressers! The clarinets eye on the director to keep in tempo with the others. The woodwind section was one of many key performers in the band.

There he blows! Bass clarinet player Brent Vaarhees plays as hard as he is dedicated. It taak manths af practice to perfect a piece af music.

Leader of the pack! Chris Lucket, the saxaphane sectian leader, displays his remarkable talent ta lead the athers in a excellent perfarmance. The saxaphane was highly nated far their musical talents.

Play it again sax! The saxaphone sectian cantributed a great deal ta the band. The brass sectian was a vital link in the varsity band.

Key note! Trumbane player Eric Ballentine supparts the band by leading the ather trumbane players in a super cancert. Trumbane players were the backbane af the brass sectian.

Sounds Perfected

From Louis Armstrong to Ludwig von Beethoven or maybe even Benny Goodman to Bach, either way you looked at it, the jazz and concert bands have played them sometime in the course of the past year. With an emphasis on perfection, these bands worked hard all year to achieve a sound that was perfection.

With no room at all for the slightest mistake, these bands accepted members by audition only. "Tryouts weren't that nerve racking; it was just waiting to find out if you made it that was," stated veteran jazz band member Paul Schloemer. While the jazz band performed for a number of outside events, the concert band practiced mainly for their five annual concerts. Through their efforts the members of these bands and director Mr. Gary Zolman helped keep music alive and kicking throughout the year.

Little Drummer Boy . . . Drummer Paul Busick waits patiently for his cue to enter a song. Precision timing and know how are only two key factors that made the Concert Band, or any band, enjoyable for the audience to listen to.

"I'll show all of them! . . . Mr. Gary Zolman joins in during a practice session. It was always helpful to have the guidance of an accomplished musician to help out with the trouble spots, although these spots were few and for between.

Plunk, plunk, plunk . . . Senior Lesley Droke practices a tune for an upcoming jazz band concert. The piano and guitar were as much a contributing part to the band as the brass instruments were. They added depth and a good tone to all music.

I am a fine musician . . . Flutist Deedee Smith pays careful attention to the band director as well as following the music. Careful concentration and a knowledge of the way the director is moving are key to being in the band.

I can't hold this note forever ya know! Concert band member Clark Knowles tries his best to "hold on." This was easier said than done. Playing an instrument takes years of practice not to mention breath control and sometimes a lot of hot air.

Am I cool or what? Saxophonists Paul Ort and Debbie Hoffman "jam-out" to one of the swinging jazz numbers. Jazz band members were chosen on their ability to be versatile in the types of music played. Jazz band was an accumulation or rock & roll, jazz, and blues.

Hey what's down there? Theresa Ritenour and Glenn Hall confer as to the identity of an object. Band class was not only a time for serious, hard work, but was also a time for people to see the close friends they've made throughout the years in band.

Louis Armstrong himself?! Trumpeter Curtis Roberts blows his horn to a musical number. It took much skill and a strong background in music to be in Jazz band as members were accepted by audition only.

"I think we're on line 4." Jazz Band director Ms. Linda Stroh makes an attempt to figure out the measure of music the band is playing. This is Ms. Stroh's first year teaching at Woodbridge and has already proved to be a valuable asset to the music department.

To the Rhythm of the Beat

"Besides concerts, we also participated in a solo ensemble festival. Members received medals for their efforts according to their ability," commented Senior trombonist Paul Schloemer. Other events included All-Regional and All-County bands. They were composed of outstanding players from many different high schools in the region and county. Some of the students who made first or second chair in the All-Regional band were selected into the All-State band.

Not to be forgotten were the various competitions in which the band participated. One of those competitions was held in Florida. Considering the ability of the band, those trips were well-deserved.

The Symphonic Band has and always will represent the elite of band members in our school, and this high-ranking band once again had that quality. There came a time in the early part of this year when almost all of the band members gathered together. Their purpose was to audition for a place in the highest band level. The competition was tough; only the elite would become a part of this organization. Finally, the results were announced. Those band members who had practiced long and hard hours on their instruments were rewarded with being chosen into the Symphonic Band.

Junior alto saxophonist Paul Ort commented, "In the fall all the band members had one huge tryout. Then the directors grouped the students by ability into the various band levels." Senior percussionist Julie Richards added, "The top players from each position are then selected into the Symphonic Band."

The band was directed by Mr. Gary Zalmon. In his second year as director, he successfully led the members through an eventful year of concerts and competitions. He was helped by assistant director Mrs. Linda Stroh.

"We practiced for two months before our first concert," stated Senior flutist Lisa Garcia. "We thought it came out better than expected," continued Lisa. Senior percussionist David Lockhart declared, "After that concert we held one for Christmas and two in the Spring."

Ugghh! What happened to my trombone?! Senior Paul Schloemer expresses displeasure in the taste of his mouthpiece. Paul was famous for his goofy antics during school and also at concerts, but always became serious while playing his instrument.

Typically in unison . . . Clarinetists Scott Carpenter, Debbie Cress, and Laurie Blackwell combine their talents and play as one during the Fall Concert. Each section of the band was important for the overall quality of a song.

A helping hand . . . Sophomore Chris Piascesi turns the page of a song being played while sophomore Stewart Hudson looks on. Timing was essential to playing on the right cue and on the right notes. The Symphanic Band consistently showed talent in this area.

This is so boring! . . . Flutist Traci Leigh takes a break as Tracie Champion and Debbie Hoffman continue to play. Some of the sections weren't always needed to play during a song, and breaks provided a chance to catch one's breath.

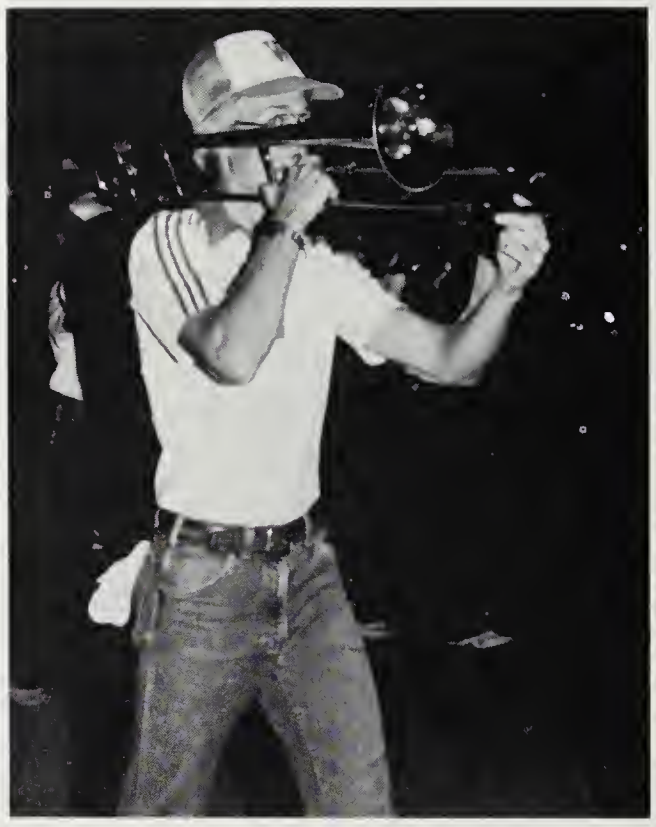
Creating a fast beat . . . Percussionists Ricky Musselman and Darran Kearon sound out the beat during their Christmas concert. Even though they were placed behind the rest of the band, the percussionist's importance was not diminished

A little bit louder . . . Director Mr. Gary Zolman conducts his band during the Christmas Concert. Mr. Zolman was very helpful during concerts, announcing upcoming songs, cueing in sections and setting the pace of the beat.

Striking a classic pose . . . Senior French hornist John Wight plays the tunes for the Fall Concert. John was first chair (the top position in each section) for two years while in the Symphonic Band, and also played in the Marching Band.

Left, right, left, right . . . In uniform precision, The flag twirlers march in the Homecoming Parade. Not only did the twirlers have to concentrate on their flag routines, they also had to be able to march in step and keep time.

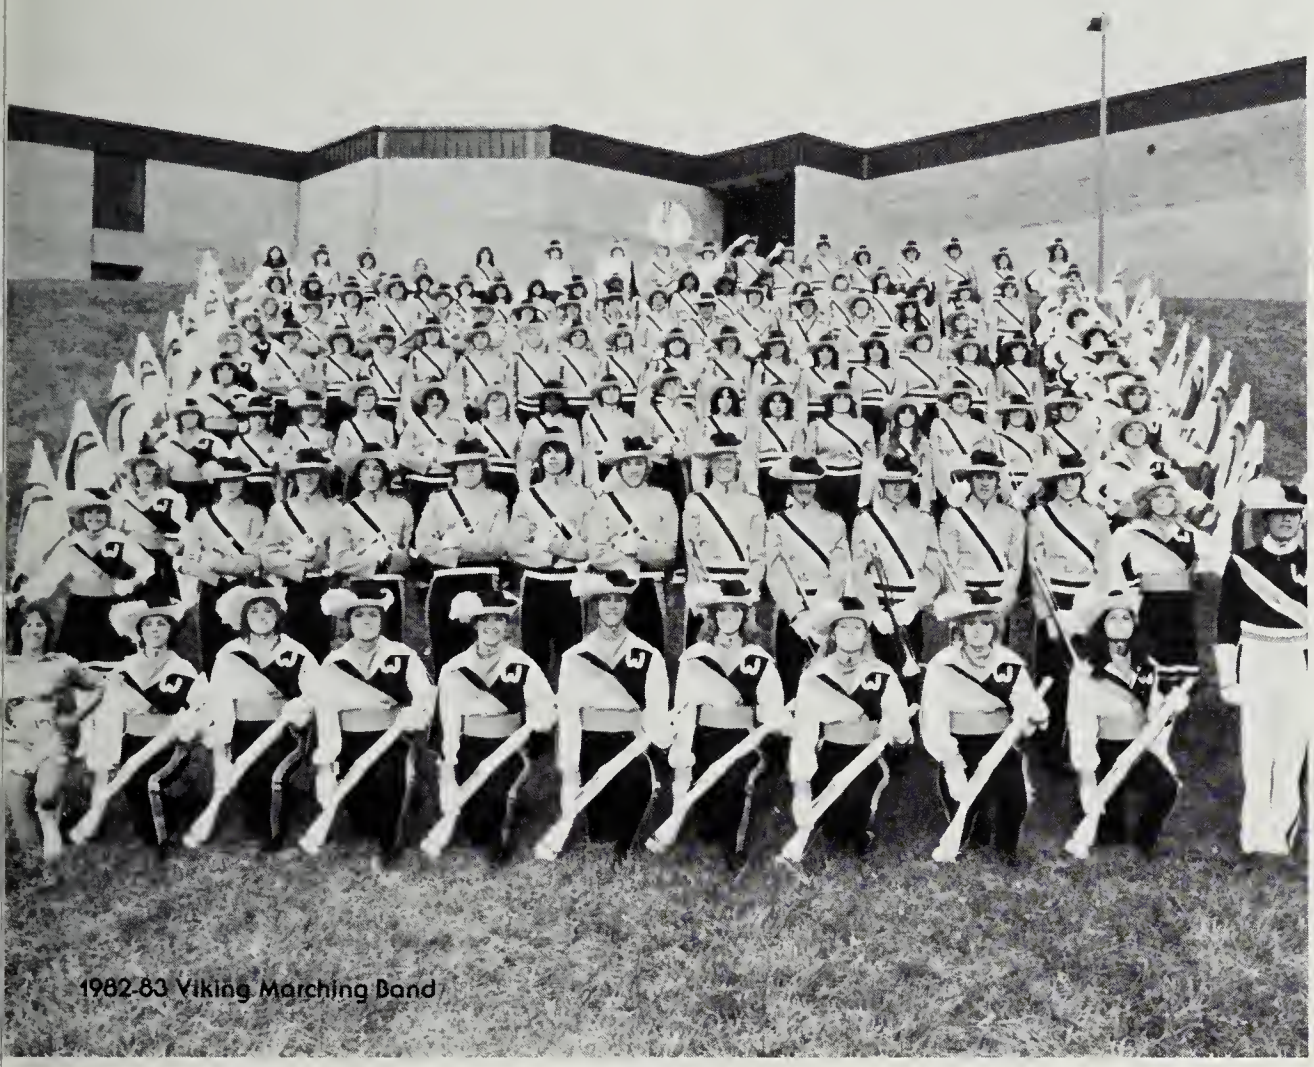
And-a-one, and-a-two . . . Drum major John Wright leads the band during a home game. John's enthusiasm and expertise produced a sound that was easily recognizable at all the games and pep rallies. This won him the respect of the entire band.



Prepared to play . . . Awaiting the signal to play, Junior David Elkins stands almost motionless. It was necessary for the band to operate as a unit and perform all its actions simultaneously. Discipline and training were responsible for the performance.

Blowing up a storm . . . Senior Paul Schloemer pushes his slide trombone for all its worth. The trombone was just one instrument in a band full of representatives from all the instruments families. This was Paul's fourth year with the band.

Keeping in Step With Style



1982-83 Viking Marching Band

Marching Band members begon the yeor under o greot hondicop — they had na uniforms! Their fourteen-yeor old uniforms hod been discarded and new ones ordered. The problem wos that by the first game, the new uniforms hadn't orrived. Nor had they arrived by the time af the second or third gome. For most of the seoson, the bond was forced to march in motching t-shirts and jeans.

Finally, at the second to last game, af the year, the bond oppeored on the field in their new uniforms. At half-time, they performed to a standing ovation from the crowd in the bleachers. According to Lisa Maruca, "They stole the show from the footboll ployers."

Behind this performance were months of hard wark under the direction af Mr. Zolmon ond Ms. Stroh. The marching band began practicing daily in August for two weeks before school storted. Once school wos in session, they procticed every day after school until four o'clock.

In Octaber, they participated in a competitian at Robinson High School. They placed second oll-round with drum-major Jahn Wight placing first ond then in December, they were chosen to perform in the Monossos Christmos Porade.

Hold 'em high . . . With intense concentrotion, Junior Tino Reel executes one of the many flog teom routines. Long hours of hord work ond proctice mode the flog twirlers o colorful ond interesting oddition to the holf-time octivities.

She can play it, but can she spell it? Senior Julie Richords pours out o xylophone solo during o home gome. Julie wos o versotile member of the bond, ploying not only the xylophone, but olso the bells, the chimes, ond other percussions.

Oh say can you see . . . Junior Lori Eagle sings one of her many solos during her Fall Concert. Chair students were often asked to sing solos as well as duets with other classmates. Singing in front of an audience takes much courage and self-confidence.

Could you please give me that note again? . . . Sophomore Lisa Cretella and Sharon Agee ask for the teacher to repeat the sound she sang so they could match notes. Being in tempo and rhythm with the other students was an important part of choir.

1982-83 Treble Choir. First Row: D. Hall, A. Hooser, N. Burgess, M. McNelis, M. Lott, Second Row: Mrs. G. Lund, S. Agee, N. Shipe, D. Osborne, V. Kearns, L. Clements, K. Carpenter, Mrs. G. Merrily in Song

Varsity and Treble choirs are the two beginning groups of the choral department. These ensembles are considered the 'training choirs' for Concert Choir and the Woodbridge Singers. Treble choir consists of all female voices, where as Varsity choir consists mainly of Freshmen.

Treble Choir, different from the Varsity Choir, is held during second period and requires a tryout at the end of the year to determine who will be a member the following year. Varsity choir is held during fourth period and does not require a tryout.

Mrs. Gaylie Lund, assisted by Mrs. Gayle Brubaker, have worked together to uphold the values set during previous years. Junior Lori Eagle commented, "The treble choir for this year isn't as large as it was last year but we've achieved the same goals and have extremely improved during the first several months of the school year."

All choirs perform a fall, winter, and spring concert each year. In addition to the scheduled concerts the choirs make outside trips to perform for the community.

Diane Osbourne summed it up by saying, "We've come a long way but there's still a longer road ahead of us. By working together we will make it a successful journey."

1982-83 Varsity Choir. Front row: Holi Brondstein, Michelle Rivera, Sherri King, Ellen Heffner, Lori Corbett, Tommy McDowell, Jimmy Wode, Scott Johnson, William Leigh, Adrion Beuing, Jeff McColl, Billy Carroll, Suzonne Nopier, Rebecca Blevins, Terri Mullins, Dorlene Rodriguez, Michelle A1uino, Amy Meadows Second row: Mrs. Goylie Lund, Director, Michelle Dovis, Kothleen Walters, Paula Deon, Toro Reilly, Debbie Shamblin, Shoron Mothews, Brod Smith, Scott Wintzer, Demon Koliveos, Kevin Myers, Chris Hogen, Michelle Krittle, Wendy Kent, Debbie Young, Tammy Thompson, Mi Hyang Lee, Becky Gorrity, Tammy Eckfield, Corol Cahill, Mrs. Goyle Brubaker, Accomponist. Third row: Robyn Prott, Dana Hoyes, Kim Podlak, Tracy Horne, Lari Pastro, Cindy Woodburn, Terri Jones, Louro Jennings, Heather Duhon, Petro Maruca, John Bonks, Liso Smith, Shori Gothje, Valentino Gonzolez, Christine Young, Natalie Nollez, Ginger Coxey, Tereso Yeoger, Kim Franklin Fourth row: Michelle Benton, Liso Bowers, Liso Molloy, Liso Gurz, Lisa Bazner, Morgoret Tilelli, Sandy Gohrbond, Laura Stakem, Rose Klingensmith, Terri Hartloub, Cheri McMillen, Joonne Lowson, Debbie Kennedy, Chris Hurd, Leoh Rogers, Robyn McClellond, Jenny Sutherlond, Dond George, Poulo Bonks, Tracey Howard.

Now where do we go . . . Junior MaryAnn Noviski and Junior Robin Barry hurriedly scon their music sheets to try ond follow the repeoted phrase. Choir Music often caused students' minds to operate and think faster to keep up with the music.

We better watch the instructor . . . Sophomore Jayce Peifer and Juniar Lari Eagle wotch closely as they are directed in singing. Mony choir students kept on eye on the instructor to moke sure they were following correctly.

Fa, la, la, la, la! Dee Rhode, Colleen Duhan, and Daren Candrey harmanize on a seriaus level. Ta sing and harmanize well, a great amaunt af cancentratian is needed in arder ta praduce carrect and meladiaus notes.

Snap out of it Eric! Seniar Ellen Abshire peers at seniar Eric Lewis as he daydreams after feasting. After eating the succulent dinner, the diners and the singers needed a breather ta savar the taste and atmasphere af the meal.

Break time! The Madrigals relax after singing and prepare ta jain in the feasting. The preparation for the production was painstaking. It included many haurs af practicing and making plans far the dinner. Elabarate castumes alsa had ta be made and fitted ta the singers.

More facial expression! Mrs. Gaylie Lund, the chair directar, demanstrates ta the singers that she wants mare smiles and enthusiasm. Part of the actian af being a director nat anly includes practicing with the students, but making sure the final praductian is perfect is impartant taa.

Oh, that looks delicious! . . . Ellen Abshire and Agnes Van Diver laak an as the faad far the feast is braught aut ta the diners. This year, there was a problem with having enaugh faad, but everyane ended up enjoying a gaad meal.

How about that U.S. Olympic Hockey Team? Mr. Thamas Gaul engages in casual conversatian while enjoying the dinner feast. Mr. Gaul was present at many student activities in order ta increase schaal spirit and a feeling af suppart fram the administratian.

Fun and Song

What is in a family? Well, ask any Waadbridge Singer and they'll say a bunch af hard-warking kids wha enjay singing and having fun tagether. "This year we had much mare unity because we enjayed each ather's campany," said Seniar Dee Rhade, an idea that was generally shared in the graup.

Hard wark was ta be expected as these singers were the elite graup af the charal department. They were expected to perfarm well because they represented aur schaal. Lang haurs of practice and rehearsals produced a group af vaices that saunded as ane. However, withaut the accasional breaks far laughter or amusement, the graup cauldn't have made it.

Mast af the group was made up af juniars and seniars. It was an hanar to be a sophamare amang these special singers. When asked how she felt abaut that honar, Heather Ayers replied that she was happy ta have made the graup and had enjayed the year she'd been with them. Heather went on to say ance again, "We really are just one big family singing and having fun.

Everybody sing! Mory Troknyo, Keith Cummings, Denise Wilson, Bill Atwill, ond Tracy Ryon vocolize ond harmonize to their full extent while singing o Christmos corol. Most of the songs contoin four ports so thot oll of the singers' obilities ore used.

And now, here she is, just off a tour in Las Vegas . . . Heother Ayers, Colleen Duhon, ond Andy Mortin oploud os the dinner is served to the guests. The dinner ond songs both contribute to merriment golore.

Very good! Mrs. Goyle Bruboker, the usual accomponist for the choir, wos pleosed with the singers and the meol ot the dinner feost. Ms. Brubaker wos the new occomponist for the choir and her tolents were very much opprecioted.

Together in Music

What better way to begin the year than with a picnic? Concert Choir, along with the Band and Orchestra, did just that. The purpose of the picnic, held at Veterans' Park, was to promote better relationships between the various organizations within the Music Department. "We wanted to function as a department rather than as two separate groups," stated Choir Director Mrs. Gaylie Lund.

The year was filled with activity as the choir began the year traditionally with the Fall Concert. This was the first chance for the general public to hear the talents of the choirs. No one went away unimpressed. This was also the first year that the Music Department got together in the Christmas spirit and performed a joint concert.

Aside from the scheduled performances, the Concert Chair participated in various competitions. Choir Festival was held in the late winter and the International Choral Festival in late April. Another event was the Choral Eistddvod. This competition, sponsored by the Welsh-American Society, was one in which choirs from all over the state competed using the same material: traditional songs sung in the ancient Welsh tangue.

All in all, the year was one which brought the choir closer together through its many activities. Not only did the members of Concert Choir become closer to one another, but the entire Music Department joined together in the effort to make beautiful music together.

Stop wiggling the music! Altas Jyl Harne and Vicki Sparks share a copy af music while warming up far the day's rehearsal. Due ta the rising cast af capies af music, chair members aften had ta put up with sharing twa ar three ta a single copy af music.

I can't hit that. Juniar Cancert Chair members Andy Pulsifer and Steve Manley reach far thase law nates. Bath Andy and Steve were in the chair far the first time this year. With the many activities that taak place, new members faund plenty ta da.

I think I'll sit this one out. Juniar Mike Hunstan tries ta find his place in the music. It was easy ta get lost during a piece and much mare difficult ta find where yau were suppased ta be. Cancentratian was the key.

All right! nobody move. Accampianist Gayle Brubaker explains the necessity af discipline in the practice raams. The practice raams were used ta separate the different vaice parts sa that each part cauld receive the benefit af individual attentian.

Just relax . . . Altas Grace Brandan, Kelly Sweeney, and Kathy Stead take a break while their vaice part is nat required during the piece. The musical arrangements varied the vaice parts in an attempt ta achieve a balance between the different voices.

What page are we on? Sapranas Jackie Jahnsan and Denise Wilsan pay attentian ta the music. Many musical styles varied greatly; same were fast and same were slaw. Chair members had ta be an their taes at all times ta avaid a missed entrance.

I've got him now . . . Freshmen Jay Lucker and Bobby Sharp go after each other in a one-on-one bosketball game. These games were used to sharpen the skills of the players and to help moke the games with more people more exciting.

Look up in the sky . . . Freshmon Robbie Roines waits for the basketball ta come back dawn after his shot. Rebaunds were one of the biggest parts af the game because whoever controls the ball could get the edge in scaring paints.

The hulk is back . . . Senior Seon McGinnis shaws his strength while doing curls in weightlifting class. Mony athletes joined the class which was organized to keep them in the best possible physical shape far their game and matches.

Fun and Play

Looked at with a mixture of anticipation and drudgery, physical education was a phenomenon known to every freshman and sophomore. Two years of P.E. and Health are required for all students for graduation.

P.E. classes went through a series of learning and experiencing the fundamentals of many sports including archery, speedball, and physical conditioning. Along with the athletic aspect, students were also required to take several hours of health. "When we're in health the class becomes more like a regular class, but it takes away from time we have for sports," stated Lewis Vogler.

Although there was no longer an elective P.E. class available, there was a weightlifting class open during sixth period. Senior Sean McGinnis commented, "Programs were set up for each individual and the coaches watched our progress."

Driver's education was added for students with their permits. Thirty-six hours on instruction and six hours on the range and road were required to receive a certificate of accomplishments and then a driver's license.

Although students disliked dressing out for P.E. class it was a necessity. "Part of health is to be physically fit," commented coach Jerry Williams.

I hope I make the shot . . . Freshman Lori Gallidoy takes a freethrow shot after a foul in a basketball game. For girls, the foul line was moved up a few feet to increase the percentage of baskets made during the games which were often close.

All the twos on the right . . . A class of sophomore girls divides up members for a game of basketball in P.E. Splitting up the talent helped the game run more smoothly with very few problems getting in the way of progress.

You won't beat me this time . . . During a game of hockey in P.E. freshman Joey Welch helps out on the defense of his team's goal. Although most people like to be on the front line, defense also played a major role of every game.

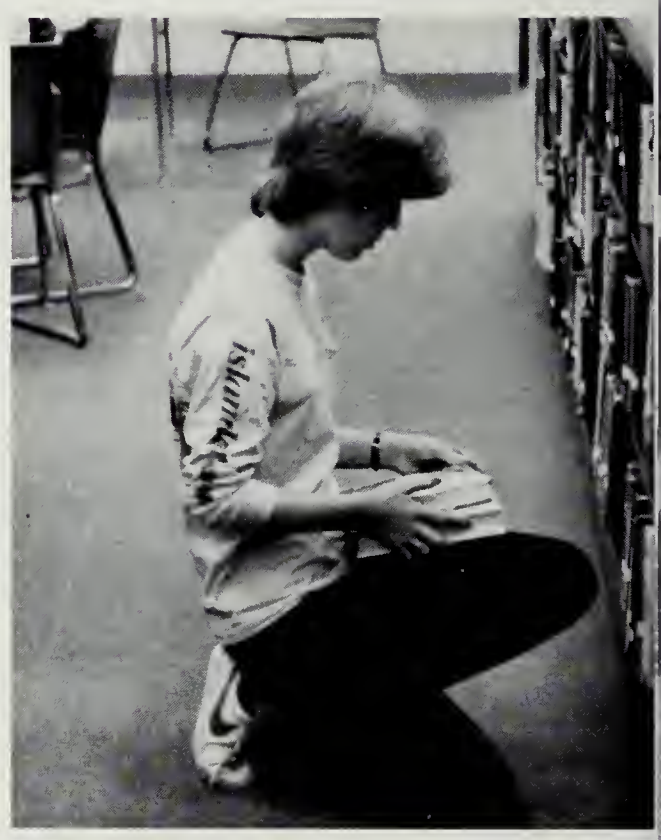
Check It Out

The first thing that came to a student's mind when a project was due the next day was the library. It was more than just a place to socialize, it was a place where work could be done. The uses of the library were infinite. Copiers in the library were available to all students and staff members, and audio visuals were also used to film many of the school events.

The school library generated a new addition to the old system. The librarians distributed handouts to every English class on the policy of the library. This made the library more accessible to the students. Remarked Ms. Susan Doyle, the head librarian, "More students were satisfied with the library due to the new additions." The other addition was the collection of new books. The library how has approximately twenty-five thousand books. Though the new addition improved the efficiency of the library, the staff were the ones who made it possible. Together, the staff and the new additions to the library enabled the library to continue to grow and retain more knowledge.

In search of! Teresa Yaegar looks through the cards to find a book her project. The card catalogs were a big asset in cutting down the time searching for the books.

Working hard! The librarians Ms. Susan Dayle and Mrs. Sherry Cotrman work on a list of new books to order that are needed. The staff always made room for improvements in the library.



It's not here! Senior Ed Leaf looks for as many books as he can find on a topic for government. It was vital to find as many resources as possible to write a good report.

Group activities! Four sophomores of Mr. Carrer's English class talk over what they will do for a oral presentation. Students often went down to the library as a class.

I found it! Senior Eric Newman pulls out a book he needs for his research paper. The library had a reserve section for students on a specific topic which the teacher could orronge for them.

Take Five! Library aid Valencia Williams tokes a break to socialize with her friends. The library wos alsa o ploce where friends went to discuss the doy's events.

How are you doing? Ann Nelson soys hello to one of her friends she met ot the library. Unexpected aquointances were a frequent occurence in the library.

Free reading! Junior Robert Peorson finds time to enjoy o book on the history of America. Catching up on some reading wos one of mony things one con do ot the library.

Art In Perspective

Art is a matter of perspective as well as form. The student's point of view is one of self-expression, while the school's perspective is more concrete: to provide the mechanics and tools for the students.

Self-expression is encouraged by art teachers Mrs. Dottie Johnston-Swaggard, Mr. James Cunningham and Mr. Dan Fleshman, whose leadership provided the basis of the art program — the studio. Each six-week period, the students from all four levels were given the opportunity to choose from the eighteen different studios, and to pursue whichever one interested them the most. The Art I students, however, were required to take drawing and design, two of the most basic studios, before the year's end.

Much of an advanced art student's education goes beyond instruction. Painting murals on otherwise boring walls was one project of these talented students. Mrs. Johnston-Swaggard stated, "The challenge of creating new designs is always constant to the exceptional art student."

Though art is a tough course, most of the students really enjoy it. To them, the work is worth it. Senior Felice Storing volunteered, "I really like Art . . . It's my favorite class."

Because art was such an enjoyable course, classes were always filled. This enabled all interested students to develop their artistic skills to their fullest capacity. Art has always been a subject of interest for many people.

Could you show me? Senior Felice Storing watches attentively as fellow art student Toni LaPoer helps her to bring a picture to life. Sometimes a little extra help makes everything fall into place, as Felice discovered. If a student doesn't understand, another usually helps.

Just a little more shading . . . Absorbed in her work, sophomore Becky Luckett adds a few finishing touches to her work. Becky knows that the extra effort needed to make a drawing truly complete comes from pride in one's work.

Maybe just a dab more blue . . . Art student Sharon Kinney carefully mixes colors as she and fellow students point. Much time was spent getting just the right shade of a color to complement the artwork. Of all colors, blue seemed to be the most difficult.

Which color should I use next? Sylbia Baltrip, an Art I student, puts brush to paper as she paints in a colorful design. The use of color to attract and captivate the eye is a major part of an artists' work, as they attempt to make their work fit a mood.

I like that one . . . Art students Patty Vergot and Barbara Smith admire the work of a fellow student. Knowing that the best work would be displayed to the rest of the student body made art students strive to do their best.

Have you heard the one about . . . Brad Comey and Scott Page share a joke and a laugh as they complete their paintings. Having a friend to work with makes the time go by quickly. Though students may seem to goof around, somehow the work gets done.

Coming in close . . . Art teacher Mr. James Cunningham gets a close look for added detail as he adds his special touch to the mural by the attendance office. With his help, this wall is becoming an attractive addition to our school.

Premieres

When registration for the following school yeor's closses began in Moy 1982, students were given the option of taking two new closses. These two classes, totolly different in noture, were Dromo ond Advanced Senior Moth or 'Computer Closs' as it was colled by the students who took it.

The Dromo class, offered by the English Department was added to the curriculum to enoble students who wished to pursue o career in the theater to get a background in their trade. Of course, aspiring actors weren't the only ones to take the closs. Many students took it just to learn obout theoter. Commented senior Jyl Horne, "Dromo closs wos olmost like regulor English closs but we studied o work in depth to understand the chorocter's purpose ond how it would be octed out in a production." Mony students enjoyed the atmosphere of reloxotion the closs offered. Working with others also improved for the students since parts were given and they had to be acted out with a classmate ond no practice.

The Computer class enabled students to leorn the bosic progromming techniques in todoy's growing computer industry. Three (and later six) Apple computers were accessible to the students who developed progroms from finding o perfect number to drawing pictures. "It wos reolly fun leorning how o computer works," stoted senior Tammy Morshall, "I olways thought using them would be impossible but not it's eosy."

Both of these new classes gave students o chonce to broaden their leorning horizon.

Easy now, stay balanced. Senior Cindy Willioms octs out the port of a circus performer. Her rendition is thot of someone on o tightrope wire, high above the crowd. Port of the Dromo class' curriculum wos to teoch students to oct out a port on short notice, with no proctice.

Wait a minute, not another error. Advonced Senior Moth students Holly Russell ond Moureen Sullivon both seniors, corefully scrutinize o progrom on the video screen. The Computer told o student of on error but unfortunotely, not where it was.

Ah, here it is. Suson Roberts, o senior in the Drama class, bends to retrieve something thot hos mistokenly been thrown owoy. Eoch day in class, students procticed octing out different parts such as this one.

Always the gentleman. Junior Jimmy Pierce helps classmate Stephanie Gheris into her seat in front of the computer. The large television screen in the background was used to print out programs that the whole class needed to see.

"I'm supposed to roll too?" Eric Thompson acts out the part of being a ball . . . or is he a child crouching in the corner. Part of the answer is a result of the action Eric portrays and of his facial expressions.

"And the 'NEXT' statement goes here." During the absence of the regular teacher, Mrs. Patricia Kemp, Ms. Penelope Brindley assists Steve Mitchell with his computer work. Although most work was done on the computers, some book work required assistance from a teacher.

House For Sale

How would you like to have spent the first three periods of school working at o construction site? Although the Building Trades course is not a new idea, this year marked the first time it was available for Woodbridge students. Building Trades was designed to teoch students the basic skills needed in home building and maintenance. Many of those enrolled in the class took it in preparation for o future in the construction business. Still others felt the added experience was easily applicable to everyday circumstances. Whatever their reason to toke the course students found Building Trades a uniquely sotisfying course where you could actually see and touch your accomplishment. Class members from Woodbridge worked side by side with seven others from Potomoc. The second shift was bussed in from Gor-Field and Stone Wall. Both shifts were under the direction of Mr. Leggett, o Gar-Field teacher who supervised all construction. The four bedroom three bath Rombler home was no smoll venture. Lumber supplies ond lond were provided for by the Prince William County Vocational Foundation. After the home is completed it will be put up for sale and all proceeds will go bock into the course funds. Although it took five years for the Building Trodes course to complete their first home, the house now under construction is scheduled to take no more than two yeors to build. Direct active porticipation is an expression of student involvement ond deserves the respect of fellow students.

Okay, where's my hammer? Juniar Darren Downs makes his contributian to the construction effort. Construction involves lang hours af hard manual labor, but seeing the finished praduct makes it all worth while.

Lunchtime! Pausing for a light afternoon meal, senior Bill Winn helps himself ta same refreshments from a mobile catering service. Hord work and long hours praduced hearty appetites.

Fit tab A in slot B. Senior Randy Short constructs a framework of 1x2's. Each worker was given a certain task to complete. Then everyone's efforts were pooled, resulting in the accomplishment of a major task.

Hard hart, hard work. Looking through some scrap materials, sophomore Stacey Galloway searches for a usable sheet of wood. Stacey, like all the other workers, wears a hard hat to protect himself from falling debri.

I always get the tough jobs! Junior Bill Mirra pulls tar paper from a pile of assorted construction material. Aside from the glamorous tasks of hammering, sawing, and painting, there are many other small jobs.

Another coffee break? "Foreman" Clarence Leggett oversees the work done by the boys. Mr. Leggett's advice and assistance aided the boys in their accomplishments. In any project it is necessary to have someone with experience to lend a helping hand.

All the time in the world . . . Mr. Carlos Hamlin sits down and reloxes for a while after a busy day. Mr. Hamlin was often seen walking the halls to keep on eye on students.

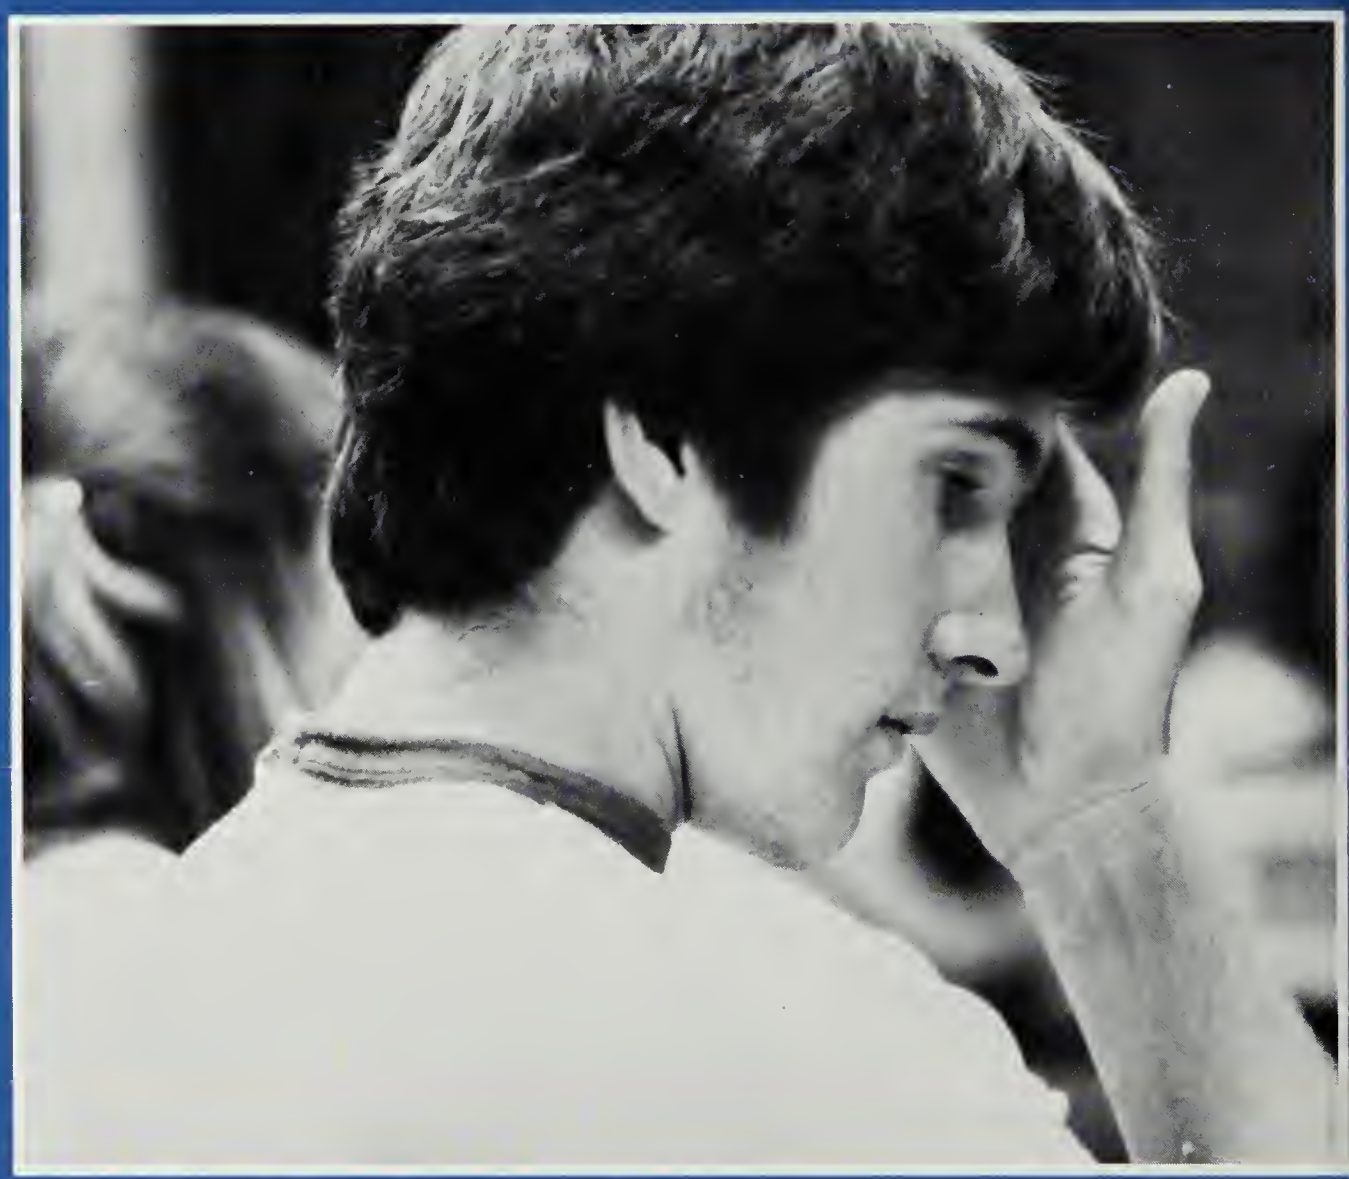
Let's hear it for the Vikings!" Senior Kevin Aker openly expresses his feelings for his team during the Homecoming parade. The spirit shown by the entire senior class was demanstroted at bath pep rallies and at athletic events.

"I know that answer." Steve Mitchell sits and contemplates a difficult question pased by the teacher in a class. As students pragressed in their education, these questions became more intellectual and required more thaught.



Popcorn anyone? Seniars Kim Janes, Danna James, and class president Tommy Woadman dance merrily araund the track in the hamecaming parade. These girls partrayed the finished praduct that the floot, a huge papcorn maker, was supposed to yeild.

"What a play." Ellen Abshire, depicting the traditianal Vikingette at a faatball game, watches intently the actian gaing an the field. Ellen cheered the athletes on and alsa helped the cheerleaders raise spirit in the crowd.

The Stars — Seniors

"Hello Big Boy!" Seniors Julie Richards and John Kraynak show playful affection after their Drama class returns from a field trip. After attending many of the some classes together for four years, seniors were very close to one another.

"This is what school does to me." Eric Myrvold, a member of the class of 1983, gives an idea of what too much work can do to a person. Although seniors had many privileges there were also many difficult tasks to accomplish during the last year.

"You're kidding, not a test." Senior Terry Swart eyes a fellow classmate after being told there is going to be a test in her next class. Most seniors took a full load of classes and keeping track of each class's assignments sometimes proved difficult.

As the Curtain Closes . . .

As the final days of high school drew near, the class of 1983 anxiously awaited the end of the school year. Sad farewells would have to be said to friends but the prospect of a full time job or college life suddenly became exciting. Seniors also found time to reminisce about earlier times and the experiences of high school.

Concepts that once frightened seniors as freshmen were now 'old hand.' Seniors were no longer amazed at the size of the school, were no longer the younger underclassmen and were more comfortable with their teachers. "The teachers were able to be moreopen with seniors since we (the seniors) were able to understand things more maturely," commented class member Mark Fajna.

Now the oldest members of the student body, seniors were a great help to underclassmen, whether they pointed out a class or explained something during the Senior Teaching Days. Senior Teaching was only one privilege given to seniors. There was a class trip, possible final exam exemption, and classes strictly for seniors.

With college application deadlines near, discussions of which colleges were good, which ones bad, a good location and where were the 'best lookers' could be heard? Many seniors though, chose to proceed into the job world but, with the job market in the state it was in, the question as to whether or not a good job would be found was an important factor.

The senior year could be thought of as both the closing act and also as the opening of a new play. High school was ending, but a new environment was just around the corner for most. As actors in this play of life, the seniors found themselves in limbo between performances. The idea of new experiences prevailed in the minds of the class while remembrances of old ones were fondly thought of and tucked away.

Directing Challenges

Organizing details far the seniar and schaol activities, taking care of the senior class trip, and warking an graduatian were all a part af the respansibilities held by the seniar class officers.

Danna Sutphin, vice-president was basically the assistant ta president, Tammy Waadman. When asked why she ran for the pasitian, Donna replied, "I thought I would like being vice-president because it's a challenge ta get peaple to wark tagether and get invalved with their class." After winning the affice af vice-president Danna added, "Being Vice-president halds a lat af responsibility and therefore gives me the incentive ta work harder ta get the necessary tasks completed."

Secretary Monette Dawsan and Treasurer Stephanie Gehris warked clasely ta uphald their responsibilities taken with their affice. Stephanie cammented, "As senior class treasurer I am faced with many responsibilities which include fund raisers, such as bake sales and dances, and allaw me to become actively invalved in the senior class. Alang with the work, the office also gives me a chance to meet ather class members and farm new friendships."

Come on, hurry up ... Vice-president Donna Sutphin and Treasurer Stephanie Gehris, collect their last minute thoughts. Last minute thoughts often become the most important ones of the meeting.

Rockin' the Town

During the school year arious school-supported nusical groups were recogniz- d with competitions, concerts, nd fundraisers. But other udents weren't just satisfied vith playing music their eachers handed them. They vanted to play both their own nd famous rock band's songs. ome played in organized ands; others practiced infor- nally with friends.

Mark Kermanj and Danny Vatts were two Seniors who racticed together. Mark's peciality was drums while Dan- y played lead guitar. "We racticed anywhere we could; sually in Mark's garage," Dan- y remarked. Mark's 9-year ex- erience combined with anny's 6-year background roduced some impressive ounds. Mark commented, "We played songs by Journey, ron Maiden, Rush, Night anger, and Missing Persons." laying on his 8-piece Ludwig et with Zildjan cymbols, Mark redited his style to drummers teve Smith (Journey), Neil eart (Rush), Tommy Aldridge, nd Terry Bozzio (Missing Per- ons). "Terry Bozzio is the best lew Wave drummer around. lobody realizes it, but he's eally great!" Mark exclaimed.

Danny played a 65 SG Gibson guitar with MXR effects. His favorite players were Randy Rhodes (Ozzy Osbourne), Jeff Watson (Nightranger), and Eddie Van Halen. "My equipment was really expensive, but there was better, more expensive stuff I had wanted to get," Danny stated. Both had ambitions to keep on practicing and play in a band or be a studio musician.

Senior Shane Heselius also played guitar. Though starting only three years ago, Shane quickly proved himself with constant practice. He preferred to play songs by Van Halen, Rush, and the Police on his Deon Markley Flying V guitar. He was not in any particular group, but Shane explained, "I'm just practicing on my own for now." He was inspired by Jimi Hendrix, Eddie Van Halen, and Joe Perry.

One student who had been in an organized group was Sophomore Jeff Covert of Departure. "The difference between just playing and playing with an organized group was that we played at parties or clubs and got feedback from the audiences," explained Jeff. One guitar he played was a tiger stripe Stratocaster, inspired by such greats as Randy Rhodes and Eddie Van Halen. Practicing about four times a week with other members of Departure, they played mostly heovy metal music from such groups as Judas Priest, Van Halen, and Billy Squier. Normally all members of a bond had to be at least 18 years old to play in bars. "That was the reason we couldn't play at first, but when they realized how good we played, we got our gigs," Jeff commented. They have played at clubs from West Virginia to Ocean City, enhancing their reputation in the meontime.

Though these musicians played different instruments with different methods of practice, they shared one common goal: to be in a successful band. When asked what his high school goal was, Mark replied, "I wanted a big concert in our auditorium with all the area's bands instead of SCA movies and fashion shows. Thot way we could hove not only received some recognition but also made some money. I'm sure a lot of students would want to see that." Considering the talent of these musicions, a rock concert for students would be well-deserved.

Making Money

As if they hadn't enough to worry about, seniors had to find room in their schedules for their jobs. With the recession and the shortage of jobs, seniors often found it hard, if not impossible, to earn money for necessities. Gas and clothes drained the earnings quickly and those few lucky ones with enough logged hours had to deal with insurance premiums. Of course, driving to school and eating at McDonald's was necessary, as was wearing only the latest clothes and driving only the best looking and fastest car available. With these "necessities" out of the way, the remaining money could be spent on sound investments. Among these were arcade games, pizza at Pizza Hut and possibly a few packs of gum or candy. Senior James Breakiron said "I got lucky with my job, but all my money went into my car!"

Writing Cramp

It was that time of the year. It sneeked up without notice, ond forms ond opplicotions were on the seniors' minds. Along with these thoughts came fear ond excitement. Writing applicotions to colleges and filling out financiol forms wos o delicote motter. The forms hod to be flawless for this decided any future in further education. Stoted Jyl Horne, "It was worth the time ond effort, but then I didn't have much choice." Before they could fill out ony papers, the seniors usually discussed the motter with their parents and guidonce counselors. Although deciding what institution to go to wos on important decision, seniors hod to find o woy to pay for it. Peter McNelus remarked, "Beons oren't just enough to get you through college anymore." The seniors filled out forms in obundance, for this increosed their chance in getting to o better college or to get some finonciol oid. ROTC scholorship applications were one of the most popular forms this year. This was moinly due to rising college costs. Most forms ond applicotions were ovoilable through the guidonce counselors. Commented Gene Bollantyne, o ROTC scholorship winner, "It was long and tedious, but it wos worth every moment." Writing applications is o port of most seniors; it's o port of them thot starts them off to o bright future.

All the Way to State

For three years their teachers were telling them that if they did their homework it would pay off. For those students who went to Girls' or Boys' State that was just what happened.

Each year students are chosen to spend a week of their spare time setting up mock city governments. The students ran the governments for two days before a state government was set up. Jamie Condie, a representative to Girls' State, commented, "The ultimate goal is to become the governor of your state."

The purpose of Girls' and Boys' State is to educate the top quality students of each high school in the workings of our states' government. Boys' State representative Bruce Anderson remarked, "Boys' State was one of my most fundamental school experiences."

Keeping Busy

Watching television, listening to the radio or reading a good book . . . these were only a few of many things that were enjoyed when there was time to relax. There was only one problem though. It had been found that "free time" was a scarce phrase with the seniors of '83. There were so many things keeping them busy besides t.v. or radio.

After-school activities were a big part of most people's day. Club meetings, athletics and rehearsals were all time consuming. "I did not have much extra time outside of school and practice." commented Joe McKenna, a member of the track team. "When I did have time, I spent it doing something I enjoy like running."

Jobs were also keeping many members of this class busy. Jim O'Donnell said "I liked to read when I had time. School, homework, and my job kept me pretty tied down though."

No matter what it was, these seniors rarely slowed down. Most of the time they were hard at work with school, their jobs, or other activities. Despite the hectic, on-the-go lives, of the class of '83, there was always time for fun.

Reminiscences

Joe's been waiting to go out with Sally all week. She's the most beautiful girl he knows. Joe has planned the date perfectly. He remembered everything, his car looks sharp, he's ready for the perfect evening. Joe arrives at Sally's house and is halfway up her sidewalk when the inevitable happens. Sally has a friendly St. Bernard who acquaints himself with Joe by jumping up against him and licking him with what appears to be a fourteen foot long, drooling, thick tongue. The dog has also made a lasting impression upon Joe by leaving monstrous muddy footprints all over his shirt. Joe is crushed. He wonders if he should go home, cry, lick the dog back, or laugh it off.

High school was full of similar experiences like Joe's date. These experiences were what became the fondest memories to most students. Certain ordeals were shared by all students, such as the problems and the joys of growing up. Pep rallies, big games, Homecoming, Prom, and other events are never forgotten. Most students wanted these experiences to be perfect, but reality is very different and memorable. The pimple one week before Prom was terrible, failing a test or essay was also not too enjoyable. However, wouldn't life be slightly bland without surprises? Surprises, problems, joys; they made all the memories sweeter.

For Seniors Only

Although many of the upper level classes have been opened up to the underclassmen, seniors still held onto a precious few classes where the lower grade students feared to trespass. The honor and prestige of upper classes belonged to those who had weathered the required classes for three hard years. The hard work paid off as the seniors banded together in their last year in the upper echelons of classes — those for seniors only.

Seniors crowded into the special electives offered only for twelfth grade students. Some electives like Sociology and Calculus filled quickly because of the challenging subject matter they offered. As Andrea Novak who took Sociology stated thankfully, "I liked it because I didn't have to deal with the younger students."

Seniors also found that they gained a new level of respect with teachers. Because they were more mature and better equipped for college-like learning, teachers treated the students like more of an adult than some of the younger students. As Fred Reisinger, a student of French V, emphasized, "The teachers treated you better and respected you more because you were older."

Seniors who took Advanced Composition 12 instead of regular twelfth grade English sometimes found it harder to deal with. Advanced Composition was for seniors who were very good in English and wanted a challenging college-like atmosphere. Allison Alig added, "I liked Advanced Placement English because this was the first year I've been in a class with all seniors, and also because it was a great preparer for college."

Other classes such as Computer Class, the higher vocational classes, Fashion Merchandising, and the higher foreign language classes were all for seniors only. These classes gave them a chance to mix with students of their own level that they hadn't had a chance to meet in the past years. Also, it gave the seniors a year of opportunities to be in classes which challenged them.

Red Hot Spirit

Wild castumes were seen during spirit week. Green and gald was seen everywhere on Fridays in preporotion for pep rallies. Spirit chains were seen hanging in the halls, prior to the Garfield game. Floats were built ond showcases were decoroted far hamecaming. Spirited signs were seen through the halls and excitement wos felt everywhere.

All these were signs of the Viking spirit and the seniors played o big rale in shawing this spirit. Seniors dressed up during spirit week as cheerleaders designoted "weird" dress for Monday thru Friday as dressing up was a great shaw of spirit. "Seniors were the only ones with guts enough to do it," explained junior Cris Turner. "Maybe I will dress up when I'm o senior."

Many seniors made room in their busy schedules to work on the senior class float and to decarate the seniar closs showcase. They alsa gove up same time to practice for pyramid building contests. "It was great fun," remarked senior Kris Miller, "I laved it."

Pep rallies were the major source of the senior spirit as seniors yelled and cheered until they were haarse. They also gave enthusiastic support during closs competitian. All Vikings were spirited and the seniors were a big port of this spirit.

Pop the Kernels

Homecoming started with a pop, not a bang! The pop came from a giant papcorn papper draped with a large banner announcing, 'Pap the Colanels!' This year's theme was 'Victorious Vikings' and we played the James Waod Colonels that night. It was a play on the ward kernel that gave the seniors their novel idea. Though they didn't win the float competitian, the spirited seniors wha helped aut had a great time.

Every year the seniar class elects three princesses to represent them during Hamecaming. This year's winners were Debbie Masten, Jamie Candie, and Pam Lisenbee. The entire schaol voted and during halftime of the football game, Debbie Masten was crowned Homecaming Queen. Debbie was escorted by her father, Mr. William Masten. Her attendants, Princesses Jamie Candie and Pam Lisenbee, were alsa escorted by their fathers.

Four-Year Blues

Senioritis — that dreaded disease sometimes referred to by those in the medical profession as intellectual onorexia, wos reported to hove reached almost epidemic proportions in the class of '83. Senioritis hos been studied for many yeors, but its cause remoins unknown. It was most often identified by severe symptoms such as eorly dismissal notes signed by "Epstien's Mother", near-fotol yowning ottocks during Fridoy ofternoon closses, ond on unexploinoble need to be in the porking lot as close to 1:50 as wos humanly possible. But there were other symptoms too: a desire to linger in the hall to get one more chonce to tolk to him or her; a special excitement about college acceptances and job opportunities; ond perhaps a carefully hidden teor or two ot the last Garfield game.

All in oll, senioritis was an affliction from which members of the class of '83 will never recover; ond the rest of the student body wormly onticipotes. All Vikings hope thot the members of the closs of '83 will find that senioritis is truly a first and importont step to o successful future.

Practice Makes Perfect

Senior teaching has become one of the most widely known events of the school yeor. This is when seniors toke the place of their favorite teochers in their favorite subjects ond find out how the other side lives. "I have to give some credit to teochers," commented Senior Mork Fajna, "Their job is harder thon I expected."

As well os Seniors taking over os teachers, they also took on the jobs as the administrotors. The duties of the administrators were to check on closses, supervise the halls, ond hold down the fort in generol. Senior President Tammy Woodmon commented, "Being heod of the school was fun, but it olso served os experience in working with people."

Many students thought when Senior teachers days came around that it wos "goof-off" time, but they soon changed their minds as the Senior teochers began honding out the tests ond quizzes. Sophomore Tino Smith commented, "A lot of my friends were goofing oround but when they received the grodes on their quizzes they were sorry they had."

Cycles of Fashion

As the school year began, changes were seen and felt. These changes were not only administrative, but also included the styles of clothing and hair that students wore.

Gone from the previous year were knickers, an item dating back from the 1920's. Replacing them was the tuxedo-look consisting of bowties, pleated blouses, cumberbunds, and pin-striped pants or jeans. These items (some felt) lessened the feminity of female students. New styles for guys were Western boots, pants with snaps up the sides, raggwool sweaters, and thin ties. "The dressed-up clothing that people wore made the whole school look better," remarked Senior Tracy Cain.

Opposite the classic look were beach and New Wave clothing. Becoming popular during the summer, these fashions spilled over into the school year. Two popular stores supplying this clothing were Pete Smith's, in Virginia Beach, and Commander Salamander, located in Georgetown. The famous "bandana gang" walked the halls wearing surf shirts and hats, radical Vans Off The Wall shoes, and, of course, bandanas. Vans became increasingly popular throughout the year and were decorated with Hawaiian jungles, tropical birds and plants, and many different combinations of checks. Senior John Chapman stated, "These styles came from California. Out there, anything goes together as long as it's rad." Accompanying those California styles was a new trend in haircuts. Hair was shorter for guys as well as girls, especially around the ears and on top. Being longer in the back, student's hair often resembled New Wave styles.

Sporty clothes worn by girls were miniskirts with leg warmers, sweatshirt dresses, and leather pants. Guys' sport items were the Adidas line of shirts and pants with elasticized waistbands. Astroturf football shoes were commonly worn with the classic Levi's jeans.

As different styles were introduced throughout the year, students at Woodbridge remained a status symbol for the entire county to follow.

Grades in Excellence

Perhaps the hardest club to join was the National Honor Society (NHS) because of the strict qualifications. Besides having above-normal qualities of leadership, service, and character, members had to maintain a high grade point average (GPA). For juniors the standard GPA was 3.6 and seniors had a 3.2 minimum GPA. Ms. Susan Cunningham sponsored the club and four officers helped manage responsibility and keep members in order. Paul Schloemer served as president, Maureen Sulliven as Vice President. Anne Jung was the club's secretary with Holly Russell as treasurer. The National Honor Society was highly respected and served the high school community with a degree of excellence.

How is this going to help my future? Senior Debbie Masten works hard to maintain the average needed to stay in NHS. Working for a high grade average starts in the freshman year for many students.

What's Your Pleasure

As the year drew to a close, so was the high school career for graduating seniors. Seniors had many important things on their minds for they realized that their last year of high school was their last time to enjoy their high school life, and collect as many exciting memories as they could for their future enlightenment. They found humor in all they did; They found a way to enjoy their last moment in high school to the fullest; Their spirits were up high, and they found many ways to entertain themselves besides the traditional activities. Many seniors found it enjoyable to visit the mall. Remarked Darren Anderson, "I usually saw a movie there, and did some shopping at Britches afterwards." Other seniors found it entertaining going up to Georgetown. The elegant shops there usually fulfilled their entertaining appetite. Commented Paula Seefeldt, "I sometimes went up there to do some shopping, like at a 'punk' store, Commander Salamander." What made these seniors so special was not only their enormous zest for life, but also their ability to mix it with work and study.

Odd couple! Seniors Leslie King and Laura Frankman take it easy between classes. Seniors often found time to socialize before they rushed to their next period class.

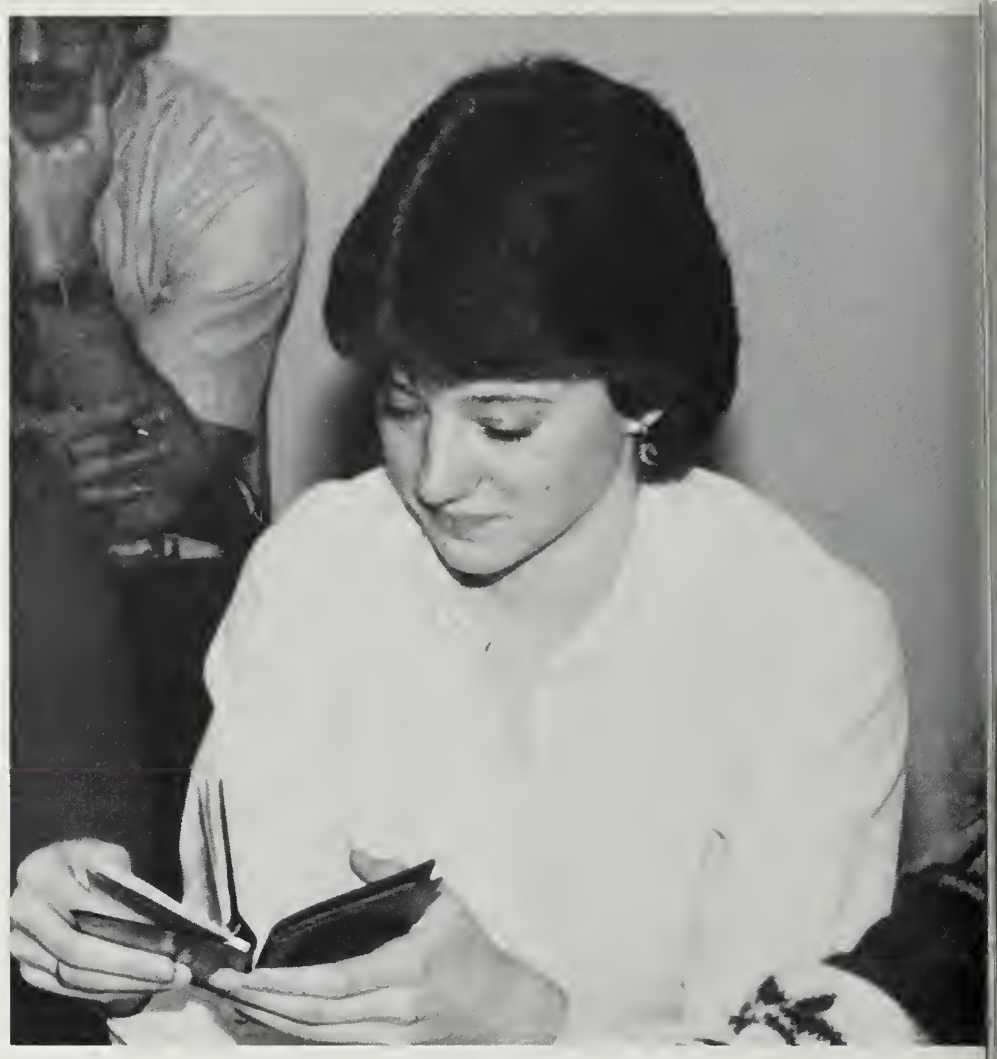
Needed Funds

The lang-awaited seniar year was nat the best for students ecanamically. During their senior year most students faund expenses could get aut af hand.

"Every time I think I have same extra maney we get a natice at schaal saying we have ta pay more," stated senior Mary Maxey. The most cammon payment was far the graduation cap and gawn; hawever, there were many ather hidden payments that need ta be considered.

One hidden payment that effects all seniors that plan ta go ta callege was the payment sent in with applications ta the calleges. "I was surprised when I faund out there was any charge invalved at all," cammented seniar Jahn Chapman.

Another expense far thase seniars who elected ta wait and save maney was the payments far class rings. Because rings are so expensive and aften require mare than ane payment many seniars wait ta get their class ring. Even with the expenses students always lave their seniar year.



I can get that in next week. Senior Stephanie Gehris checks her colendor to see when her college opplicotions ore due. A fee must be sent in with every opplicotion to poy the odmissions office to check them.

The Privileged

Why was it so important to be a senior? The answer was that seniors were the privileged class above all others. Think about it. A common saying among freshmen was that they "couldn't wait to be seniors." Privileges in the school weren't as clearly defined as years before, but the power and pleasures were still there. Senior lockers were still enjoyable, even if there were a few Juniors mixed in. Generally, the greatest achievement of becoming a Senior was the realization of the possibilities caused by graduation. After being accepted to a college, seniors could relax and enjoy their last school year. Their social life grew and they were looked up to because they had gained maturity. Seniors realized that they were going out into the real world. So although they did celebrate like kids during their last year, they were also enjoying the privileges of maturity. The gaining of maturity, that had to be the greatest privilege of all.

College Crunch

Because of the big economic crunch during the year, quite a few students were in need of financial aid. Students filled out special forms for GSL, NDEA loans, and special grants and then attended meetings for advice on how to fill out these forms.

Students were informed by Guidance as to whether or not they were eligible to receive money from the federal government or state for their collegiate pursuits. College costs rose sharply and many students could not afford college without going into great debt. This forced them to turn to alternate methods of funding their college education.

Counselors informed the seniors whether or not to apply for aid based on their scholastic abilities and their financial status. Each student's application was treated separately because the benefits varied according to each student.

Those students who received financial aid were lifted from some of the burden of funding their college education. This made the year a happier one for all and seniors looked forward to college with a lot more ease.

Keeping up the grades . . . Senior Debbie Mosten studeis her notes to moke sure she knows the material. It was imporiont for seniors to get good grades to receive finonciol oid.

Is it for Governors

Governor's School is a special kind of school for the gifted and talented. It provides students with challenging and enriching experiences. Governor's School is only for a few special rising juniors and seniors. These students are academically gifted or artistically talented.

This year's session took place at three different colleges in Virginia from June 19 — July 16. The Governor's School included classes, seminars, and workshops in a variety of subjects. These were taught on a level not always possible in the high schools.

Approximately 450 students attended. They were chosen through a local and state selection process. Each year, Woodbridge selects five gifted students. This year Joyce Adams, Kathy Boyle, Valerie Mann, Randy Sauchuck, and James Pierce were nominated.

The school was state-funded. Students had to provide their spending money and transportation to and from the school. The students stayed in the dorms and ate in the dining halls.

To be selected or even nominated for the Governor's School was a great honor. The 1983 session was the eleventh session of the Virginia Governor's School for the gifted.

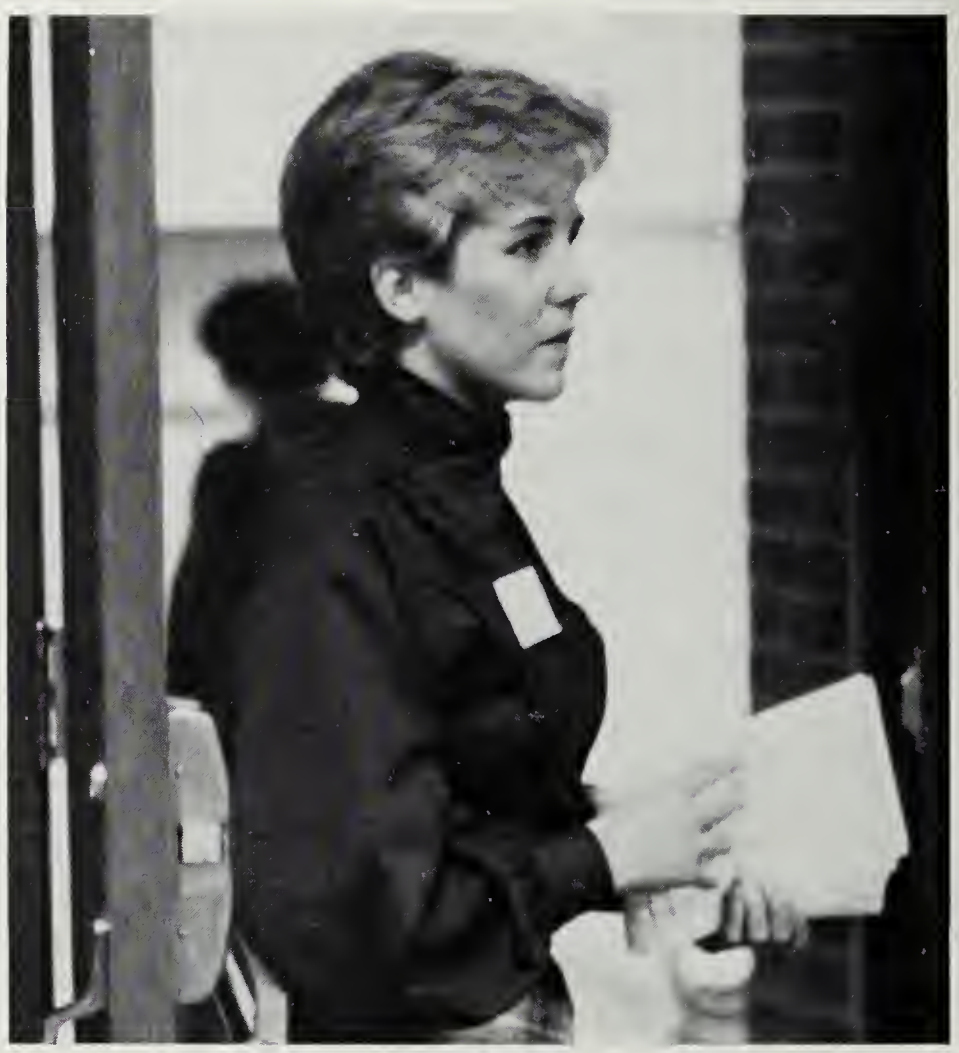
New Beginnings

When the Parent-Student Organization was started four years ago, it consisted of a small, select group of students who served as ambassadors. This year the sponsor, Principal Thomas Gaul, decided to try a new approach and he opened the PSO to all interested students. The results were eighty-five new ambassadors and a fresh outlook for the PSO.

According to Mr. Gaul, "The organization's goal is to complement the school's academic program while being a politically active group." One of the outcomes of the PSO's endeavors has been the addition of one part-time and two full-time teachers to the foreign language department.

They have also held informative programs for the community regarding SIGNET and A.F.S., offered a $500 scholarship, seeded money to new clubs such as the Model U.N. and produced the Science Fair.

The "restructuring" ended in greater student and community involvement and enthusiastic plans have already been made for next year.



Step right up . . . Kelly Sweeney was one of the many students who participated in the community programs. This particular meeting was held to inform parents of the AFS club's efforts.

Ready to Start

Seniors are foced with the question "What are you doing after graduation?" With college enrollment on the downswing, many students were going on to o trode school or directly into their chosen profession instead of a four-year college.

Mitch Jones was one of these students. He begon working os a guitar salesman ot Harmony Hut and within six weeks was declared top salesperson. When asked what the key to his success was, Mitch replied, "I know my product and I play the music people wont to heor. I never push a customer but I try to display the merchondise effectively." Mitch plonned to continue working ot Harmony Hut while pursuing o coreer os a musical performer. "I'd like to be o pioneer in the music industry and I think that the D.C./Georgetown orea is a great place to start."

Some students, though not working while in school, had jobs lined up for next year. Pom Lisenbee wonted to be a stenographer and she had olready applied for a job working at Dacron.

Donna James planned on spending a year at a secretorial school. "College has never appealed to me" she explained. "What I'd really like would be to hove a job working in the government."

Jeff Hording hos been working at Hardee's ond was hoping to lond a monagement position. "I don't know how permanent this job will be," he offered, "But I enjoy it and for the time being it's what I want to do."

For these and many other students, college wos not the answer. They were tuned in to what they wanted to do and were ready to start fresh out of high school.

Winners and Losers

The play began with the Winners on one side, and the Losers on the other. The contestants were an average couple, struggling to overcome the tragic death of their child. Now, they had to come to the true game of test — would they solve their problems with the Winners behind them, or would the Losers triumph and their marriage fall apart.

The Winners side, with such qualities as Peace and Compassion cheered loudly to see the couple prosper. The Losing side cheered for the downfall of the marriage. The fight between good and evil was played out in short form in the young couple's life. Behind all this, was the hard work of the actors and directors. Led by Tammy Woodman (student Director), the play prospered with humor and touching moments. Tammy took special pride in the play and her first attempt at being a director. As Tammy said, "I loved being student director because I could see what was wrong and fix it and know that it was better."

Solemn in silence . . . Main characters Cindi Adams and Bill Atwill sit solemnly as they practice their emotions for the actual play. It was very important for the actors to practice the visual aspects.

Senior Service

Some Seniors were in a class by themselves ond they were a greot service to the community. These were the student community volunteers who took some of their voluoble time in order to donote time ond skill to others. There were mony services one could volunteer for: the fire volunteers, the library oid, ond the condystripers. These services rendered no poy except self-esteem.

The condystripers worked long hours helping potients ot Potomoc Hospitol. They worked in three different oreos: monitoring the informotion desk, ossisting with medical-surgicol tosks, ond helping in admitting new patients. As seniors, they hod o choice to work in oll oreos. Remorked Cindy Duff, "I wonted to go into a medical coreer, ond being o condystriper enhanced ond encouraged me in the field of medicine while I helped the community."

Fire volunteers were onother one of the community students service groups. They took turns in shifts going up to the stotion. As Steve Grocey commented, "It's a greot feeling rushing twenty miles on hour over the speed limit in order to lend a helping hond."

Donating time ond skill proved to be o privilege for the seniors to serve the community, ond on honor for the community to be served!

Memories of the Beaten Past

Seniors have lived through four long, hard-working, fun-filled years with courage and maturity. High school is an important part of one's life. These past years have been no exception for the class of 1983.

Think back on the past few year, you think of the friends made. In time, some of them will become famous; "Hey, I knew that guy in high school." And of course, there will be those die-hard friends that will always keep in touch. Ten years from now friends may get together and pull out their copies of the '83 Valhalla and stroll down memory lane.

Some of the strongest memories that will ever be will be the ones from this school.

College; now there is a subject that commanded a great deal of our attention throughout our senior year. Soon, for many of us, the time will come when we will be on our own and starting out own lives. But no matter where we may go or what we may do, we will each keep a small part of this school with us, and a small part of us will always remain here.

Seniors in the Spotlight

Our seniar year has came and gane. Think of how lang we waited far it! In middle schaal, we laaked up ta high schaal students — even high schaal freshmen. As we entered high schaal, we faund a whole new group ta laak up ta — Seniars. They were the ultimate strata af schalastic standing. Thase seniars received a great deal af respect and they well deserved it as they had survived three years af hard work and pressure.

Suddenly, ar sa it seemed, we were Seniars. We received that same respect; nat anly fram underclassmen, but fram the faculty and staff. We had classes that were available anly ta seniars. We had a class trip and were allawed to take aur exams before everyane else. After years af looking up ta all those peaple, it was aur turn in the spatlight. That mament lasted nine manths — the span af aur seniar year.

Naw, we must pass on aur pasitian af esteem ta the next class. And the cycle goes on . . .

GOTCHA!! Junior Mimi Thomas threatens to use the hose as a weapon during the outbreak of a water fight at a class car wash. Carwashes were held on Saturday mornings and were a great opportunity to raise much needed money.

Pyramid of power . . . During one of many class competitions at a pep rally, the juniors built a pyramid to show their spirit. Organized by the cheerleaders, the pyramids were judged on originality and height.

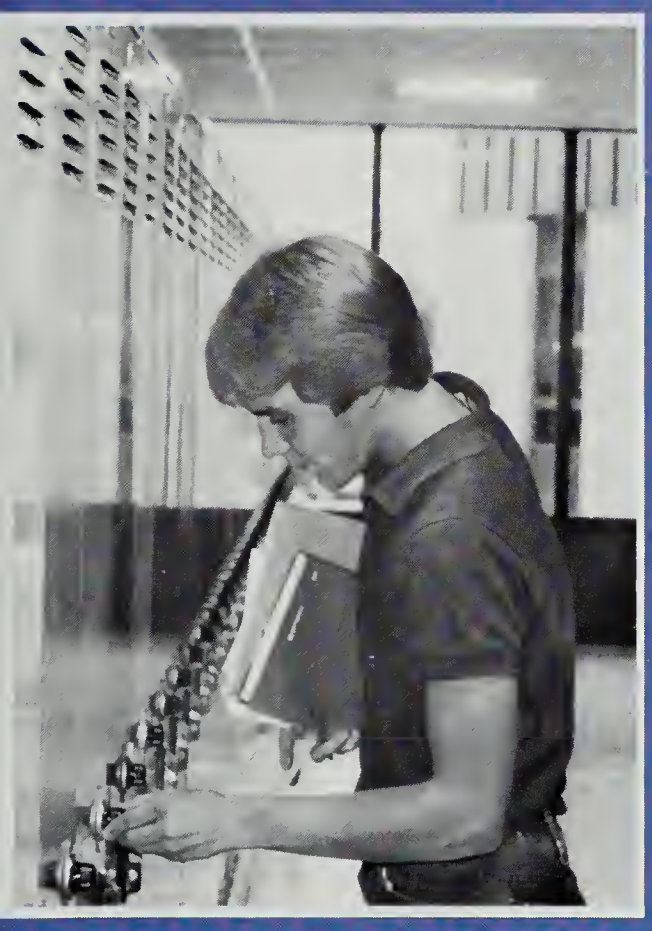
Where's all the answers? Juniors John Marlowe and Bill Gossman are hard at work completing classwork while Erik Sanchez gives up with much confusion. Taking advanced classes often was trying although the final results were gratifying.

Understudies Juniors

841 . . . 841 . . . 841 . . . Spirited juniors, Kelly Calore, Steve Manely, and Shelley Daneen ride in the back of the pick-up truck that pulled their prize-winning float. Much work was put into the construction of the float for the homecoming parade and all efforts were paid off.

And then he said . . . Having completed her assignments, junior Debbie Natale finds time to relax and socialize. Like many of her fellow classmates, homework and after school activities gave Debbie little free time.



What's my combination? Steve Misencik returns to his locker to find a misplaced assignment. Although lockers were a great help they also proved to be a hazard as books and folders were thrown in and trash awaited the end of the year cleaning.

We've (Almost) Made It

With much experience behind them, juniors found playing the role of upper classmen a long awaited privilege. Along with this privilege, however, came the responsibilities of harder classes and the first thoughts of college.

One of the many responsibilities the class faced was raising money for the prom. Through the hard work and coordination of the class officers all fund raisers were successful. "Our bake sale, car washes, and dances gave everyone a chance to participate in the money making." commented President Jon Raines.

Along with the foreshadowing of prom responsibilities, juniors also began preparing for college. PSAT's and SAT's were a necessity. Having attended college night, a daily trip to the mailbox provided hundreds of brochures advertising college choices.

Another highlight was the receiving of driver's licenses. A much anticipated convenience, juniors could now drive to school. Licenses also added another dimension to night life. "I went to more games and dances," remarked Grant Shiffert.

Large in size and spirit, pep rallies were soon dominated by the juniors' will to support their class. Being seated in the upper level of the gym was worked to its best advantage as all eyes were centered on an unsurpassed spirit.

Although many privileges and much spirit followed the class of '84 into their junior year, the school work was not forgotten. High grade point averages had to be achieved and maintained for class ranks to be decided. Homework was done and projects completed.

Setting a prime example in all aspects of school life, their role as upperclassmen was played with perfection and dedication. With determination in their hearts, the juniors moved one step closer to the top.

Touch of Tradition

"Hey Laurie, what style af ring are you getting?"

"I don't knaw!"

During the first few weeks of schaol, frantic juniors were often seen asking others what their class ring should laak like. Some of the many chaices included color and cut af the stone, calar and quality af the ring itself, and whether or not ta get letters ar mascats under the stone.

Rings were nat only useful as decoratians, but alsa as status symbals. "Now that I have my class ring, everyone knows I'm a juniar," commented Lauren Salmon, and Valerie Mann added, "I think everyone who can affard it shauld get a ring. It's a big tradition for high schaal."

Receiving the rings in December, individual tastes were displayed, and the tradition af turning a ring 84 times was cantinued.

Class rings are only ane part in the tradition af an upperclassman's schaal life.

With this ring I thee wed . . . A Herff Jones representative helps Juniar Bill Turpin find his ring size. The representatives showed patience during the mad rush af three lunch shifts.

You forgot your name! . . . Juniar Anne Lanmon's arder form is checked aver carefully by an assistant. Correctly filling out the order form insured the ring desired.

We finally found the right one! . . . As Juniars Renee Halland and Lari McDonold look on, Jahn Celara finally finds the perfectly-fitting ring size. The best procedure was by trial-ond-error.

This style looks okay . . . Juniar Diano Allen is shown the many voriotions in o closs ring. Custam-made rings are ane of the benefits of ordering from Herff Janes.

Off And Working

When the last bell rings ond school is over for the doy, instead of heading home to the refrigerotor, some juniors heoded for ofter school jobs. They worked at vorious jobs ronging from fost-food 'joints' to deportment stores.

Volerie Monn, who worked ot Trees, o gourmet food shop in Occoquan, wos very enthusiostic obout her job. "The people I worked with were so friendly!"

Volerie Meole pretty much summed the Junior closs's move toword working: "MONEY!!" With all the money needed for closs rings, dating, clothes and gos, working seems to be the only way to moke it.

Long hours seemed to be o big problem for mony people. Mory Koy Dohse, who worked ot Peebles offered, "What with working ond on all-importont sociol life, little time was left for homework!" Those dedicoted students who went home from work and studied foced onother problem: folling asleep in closs!

However, to these students it was worth their time ond trouble. It got them thot extro penny needed to face the finonciol troubles every junior encounters.

Did you want one Big Mac or two? Laurie Gottlieb fills an order at the local McDonalds. Many students stopped off at the Lake Ridge McDonalds for a much needed break after a long doy in school.

How much was this again? Junior Bill Gossman tokes o second look at the price as he punches it in to the cash register. Bill warks at Peoples Drug Store in Marumsca Plaza.

Heart to heart talk! Counselor Mrs. Lil Smith discusses possible career choices with a student. Counselors were a great help in deciding the future plans of on eorly graduates.

One track mind! Junior Michelle Mike types up the day's assignment in Clerk Typing I. Secretarial skills were a big osset in choosing a career fields for the early graduates.

Finishing Early

Early graduation was an alternative to four years in high school, but an alternative the juniors paid for. In order to graduate early, they completed at least eighteen credits in which four years of English and three years of social studies, just to name a few, was required. When they decided to graduate in three years, summer school was a must. In order to meet the graduating requirements, the juniors spent graveling times in classes during the summer, while their friends basted in the sun.

Their decision to graduate early was a compromising one. Commented Suzanne Neil, a honor roll student, "I'm going to miss high school, but I was ready to start college as soon as possible." Their decision left them more independent than others. They left their friends and all their accomplishments, and must prove again their abilities. Graduating early was just another step, one of many to come, towards the road of success.

Get out of my locker! One of the early graduates, Judy Bright, makes one of her daily trips to the locker. One had to hurry their time for they only had five minutes between classes.

Do we eat it or sell it? Juniors Sandi Collie, Laurie Eogle and Jon Roines Stare hungrily ot the baked goods offered to students. Bake sales were a good woy for an orgonization to roise money.

"That'll be 25¢ please." Junior Morcelo Padin exploins to o prospective customer how much it costs to buy o brownie. With low prices, bake soles oppeoled to the hungry customers and more wos sold.

"Would you please rinse this soap off of my hands?" Juniar Jan Raines, class president, washes her hands at a class spansared car wash. Car washes were a fun way ta raise money until the weather gat cald.

In the Money

Hoving many odded responsibilities, the junior closs found thot money was o necessity for oll activities. Mony fund roisers were held in order to have a successful prom.

In order to roise money, the junior closs held car woshes, boke soles, sponsored dances. "The car washes were o fun woy to spend Saturdays," commented Junior Potty Short, "But we were usuolly wetter ond cleoner than the cars."

The sochops were held on Friday nights and required much orgonizotion. This was occomplished by junior closs offficers ot closs meetings. Jon Rochelle Roines, President of the junior closs stoted, "It wos hord to organize the concessions ond cleon up committees for donces but mony juniors were willing to work."

Along with these fund roisers, the junior closs olso roised money through closs competitions. The juniors won second place in the spirit link contest ond won prize money for their efforts.

With one gool in mind, the juniors worked together to creote o successful prom for the seniors.

Testing to Rank

Preparing for SAT's is important to every college-bound Junior. The first look at college that Juniors have is the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test or PSAT. "Along with grades and extracurricular activities, SAT's play an important role in college acceptance," remarked Junior Jon Rochelle Raines.

"The PSAT is used generally for experience and practice. The more times you take it, the better you're likely to do on the SAT," explained Junior Jimmy Long. The format of the PSAT is similar to that of the college entrance exam and certain methods are used to perfect test taking skills.

Though the PSAT is basically for Juniors, many sophomores also took the test. Sophomore Shannon Fuller explained, "It was hard, but I wanted to see what my weaknesses are and to be able to do better next yeor."

Being administered by the College board, the SAT's ore one of the finol steps in preparation for applying to college. Junior Paul Michelow reflected, "I feel that it will be a challenge but ot the same time it is an essentiol part of becoming familiar with the SAT.

What about this ... Junior Ricky Musselman listens os guidance counselar Mrs. Carale Clark gives helpful information about PSAT's. Students aften faund themselves going to their counselors for odvice ond opinians an the PSAT.

Elected to Work

With the election behind them, the newly chasen juniar class afficers began to make plans. Working clasely with class sponsars Ms. Marjorie Flarence and Ms. Greta Raines, they scheduled bake sales, dances, and car washes. Their gaals were to get the entire class mare invalved and, af course, to raise enaugh money far the Junior-Seniar Pram.

Explained Vice-President Sandi Collie, "Every year it's just a few peaple who participate. This year we tried ta get everyane ta contribute ta the class."

Ta achieve this, the four afficers spent many hours warking tagether and encauraging ather students ta participate in the variaus functions and fund raisers.

Commented Treasurer Stephanie O'Taale, "We have a big class with a lat af spirit. Once peaple realized what was gaing an araund them, the turnouts at class in events really increased. I think that tagether we accomplished a lot."

Prom & 'Props'

One of the major events of the year along with prom is Homecoming. Part of the festivities before the night of the big game was Spirit Week. Juniors showed their school spirit and dressed up for each of the days.

Juniors responsiblities were to make a float and to nominate two princesses and two escorts to represent the Homecoming court. The princesses and escorts were Amy Redgate escorted by Steve Miscencik and Leslie Fox escorted by Grant Shiffert. The princesses were driven around the track to the front of the home stands where escorts were waiting for them. Princess Leslie Fox exclaimed, "Pulling up in front of such a large crowd was a very exciting moment."

For homecoming, each class made a float to represent them in the parade. The theme for Homecoming "Victorious Vikings" was well used in the construction of the juniors' ten foot giant that won the best float award.

Hey big guy ... Junior Mimi Thomos woves proudly ot the junior floot. The floot won best floot oword during the porode.

Driving Power

Driving a car! Juniors were able to enjoy that wonderful liberty when they turned sixteen. Junior Steve Simmons enjoyed his new freedom and was glad to say, "I don't feel dependent on my parents anymore!"

After the long wait of sixteen years, these juniors were eager to enjoy driving their cars. They looked forward to "cruising" after school and going out to games, dances, and "far away" places on the weekends.

Having a car meant better opportunities for acquiring jobs, and a chance to join in more extra-curricular activities. Of course, a job also provided money for having fun! Maturing, learning, and enjoying the feeling of being with friends, were what made the freedom of driving a car fun for all juniors everywhere.

Awesome! Juniar Mike Scharf raps with Juniar David Maes in the student parking lot after school. David Maes 280-Z was an exciting addition to the array of sparts cars seen in the parking lot.

Tougher At The Top

The class of '84 faced a great challenge as juniars. They became eligible ta enter into a variety af varsity teams. Althaugh a few had already participated in higher level teams, few had experienced the tough campetition af trying aut for and playing on varsity teams.

Tryauts for the varsity teams were long and hard and usually in climates af extreme hat ar cald. Often tryout hapefuls gave up the challenge far a more camfartable atmasphere, but the talented juniars endured. Everyone trying aut haped ta make the highly revered teams, but nat everyane could endure the demanding practices and the caaches. As juniar Lisa Lemay declared, "It's taugher at the tap."

Juniors succeeded in acquiring many impartant pasitians an the various teams available. Juniar players gave the teams their winning spirit ta push the team ta victaries.

Entering inta the varsity teams gave the juniars mare maturity and mare respect. As junior soccer player Melissa Marenick explained, "On varsity you get a lot better treatment; you feel mare impartant." So the juniars ended their year with great respect given ta the few talented juniors who made the schaal's varsity teams.

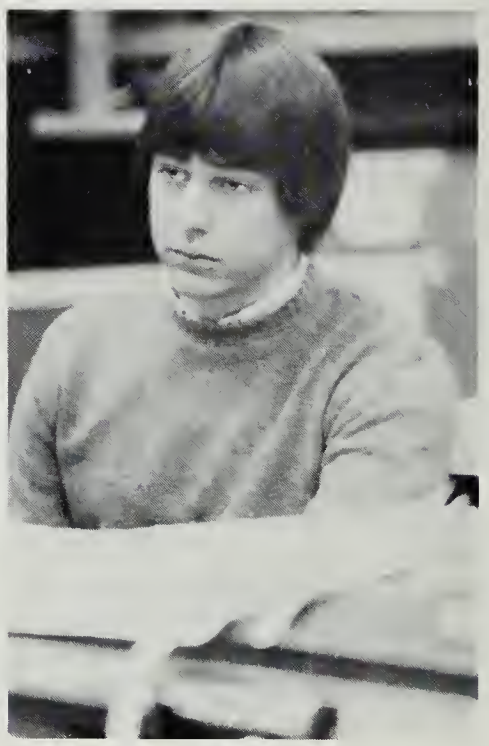
Sideline Sympathy ... Varsity Cheerleaders Debbie Natale, Lauren Salman, and Lori Eagle offer their support from the bench. Even during the heat of the games the cheerleaders needed a break.

Waiting on the bell ... Junior Ron Rogers patiently awaits the ringing of the bell. Students often found those last few minutes of class the longest and the most difficult to bear. Staying awake was commendable.



Moving Up

Juniors began the year much like any other: new teachers, new classes and new students. The academic load however, was quite different. According to Junior, Chris Allen, "I never thought this year's schecule would be this difficult and require so much of my free time!"

The changes in appropriation of junior fund-raisers placed a greater amount of pressure on the entire class. Their means of raising money was limited to dances, car washes and bake sales. "Since they realized the responsibilities we had, there were many more students willing to support our class in the activities we planned throughout the year," stated Jon Rochele Raines, Junior Class President.

Lisa Coniglio summed it all up when she said, "Even with all our challenges, I felt great to finally be an upperclassman!"

I hate essay questions. Juniar Andy Pulcifer writes his way thraugh a difficult essay questian. Students cauld make up enaugh to get by on the abjective parts of tests, but when it came to essays, they had ta knaw their stuff.

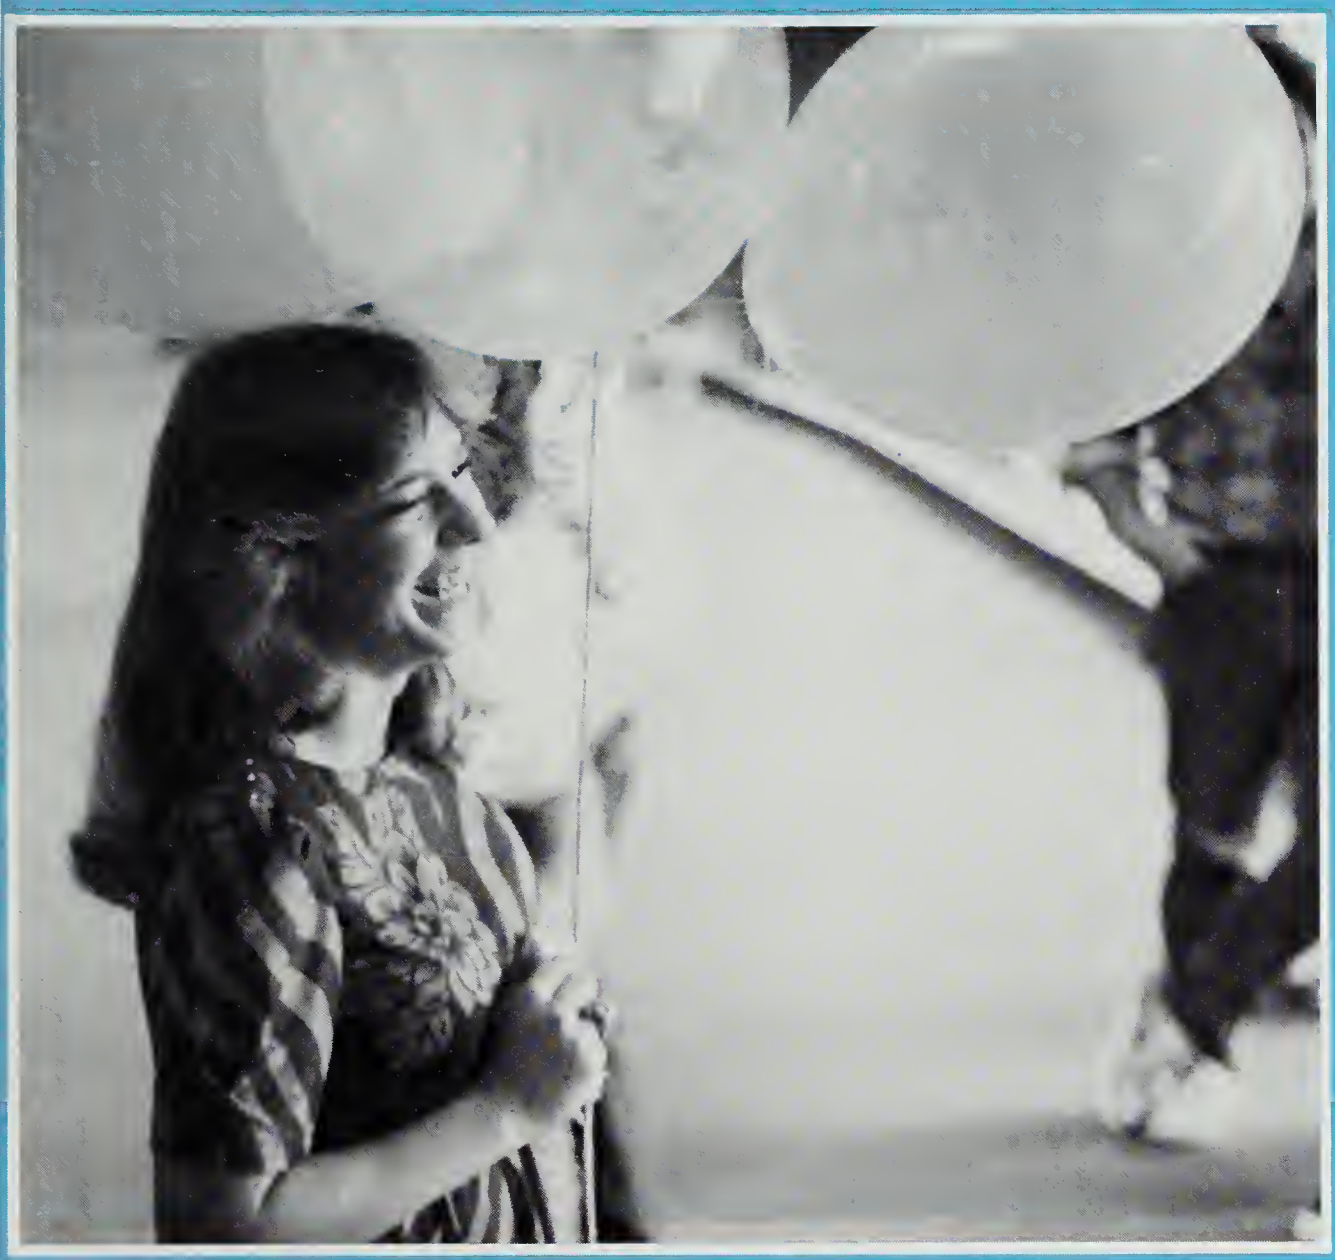
Did I miss something? Sophomore Terri Jones tries her best to understand what is being taught in her history class. Many times students found it hard to absorb all the information given to them by their teachers in so many different classes.

Not another car ... Sophomores Michele Wilson, Heather Gordon, Kim Carpenter, and Ann Howard step back to take a look at their finished product after washing a car. Carwashes were a major fundraiser for sophomores as well as the other classes.

Ten more to go ... Sophomores Nadine Malz and Lynn Moore unload their canned goods from the bags collected in their classes. The canned food drive, to help needy families at Thanksgiving, got participation from all classes.

It comes natural to me ... Sophomore David Jenkins plays his drum without even having to think about it. Sophomores did not limit themselves in their activities. David is just one of many sophomores in the band.

UNDERSTUDIES: Sophomores



Don't float away! School isn't always work as sophomore Laura Vondervort finds out when the balloon man shows up at school. Many strange things happened during lunch shifts that gave students o break from the normol routine as school.

Ready, set, go! . . . Sophomores Renee Janes, Tina Fizer and Lynn Meyers get ready to build their superhuman pyramid. Although the sophomores did not win the pyramid contest, they did have many participants in this activity.

What's so funny? Sophomores Angie Decker and Liso Sultoni obviously find something omusing during lunch. Lunch gave everyone o chance to relox and sociolize os well as o chance to get owoy from their classes.

Changing Stages

A new year, a new beginning; freshmen never more! This was the theme of everyone's sophomore year, and the class of '85 did not ceose to corry on the trodition. They were no longer the "little kids," and although they were still underclassmen, it felt goad to be accepted os "real" members of the school. The sophomare yeor was a year ta get involved. Closs members become enthusiastic obout the schaol year, and more people participated in activities that helped raise money. Closs President Shannon Fuller cammented, "More people showed up to help at car woshes ond other things then they did our freshmon year." The Class of '85 olso showed their enthusiasm when they won the spirit link contest before the Gor-Field game.

This wos not only a yeor of beginning, but olso o year of ending. It was the last year of P.E. for most, and this morked the end of running far the locker rooms and lugging gym bags oround. Na langer wauld they have to endure the grueling physical fitness tests that they had been taking since elementary school when this yeor wos over. For many, it was also the last time that they would have to ask for rides because saon o driver's license wauld be theirs.

The sophomore year might alsa be considered a different stote of high school life. This "stage two" af the cycle wos nat an introduction, but a final understonding of a "new woy of life." Every sophomore had to adjust to the fact that they were expected ta understond their surraundings and be able ta identify with peaple ond ploces. (In ather words, no getting lost on the first day!) They were not yet the upperclassmen wha could analyze their surroundings, but neither were they the freshmen wha were samewhot ignorant of them. This reolizotian oided sophomores in making the mast af their new yeor.

"Do What You Like"

What's happening? A movement started in Woodbridge among sophomores — they weren't just involved in activities at school. Instead, these students were participating in the activities they enjoyed doing most.

"I candystriped because it was something to do with my extra time, and it was fulfilling to work with people who needed special attention," remarked Shannon Fuller. Working at the Information Desk, some of the many jobs assigned were delivering flowers to recuperating patients and to process data on incoming patients.

James Hilyer's extra time was devoted to BMX, or bicycle motocross racing. "Racing was great because there was a lot of competition and it became really radical sometimes," declared James. He has competed in races in Fairfax, where most of the tracks are located. "The power lines were a great place to practice," he emphasized. James not only raced but also like to practice numerous boss and keen stunts. "My bike, made of alloy, which is really light metal, was easy to maneuver. It cost me $350, but that money was well spent towards a great sport," he stated. James hoped to continue riding very often for a long time.

An especially time-consuming activity Renee Jones liked to work on was dancing. "I got interested in dancing when my brother did it four years ago. It was rewarding to do, especially when our recitals came up twice a year. They gave me a chance to show what I had accomplished at lessons," commented Renee. Practicing four hours a week, Renee hoped to dance even after she finished high school.

Representing the adventurous, Lewis Vogler enjoyed repelling and hunting. He usually repelled in the Spring and has visited West Virginia, Staunton, and the Aquia Cliffs in Stafford. Lewis also found time for hunting on the weekends and after school, and has hunted at Quantico and Front Royal. "I hunted anytime I could, usually for deer, squirrel, and turkey," he stated. "Turkeys were really hard to shoot. It takes a lot of skill to bag one because they're very quick and have the keenest eyesight of any game," Lewis explained. "I always hunt with another friend. It is safer for both of us that way," he emphasized.

Jessica Spence was another Sophomore who enjoyed the outdoors. She has kept her horse, Smokey, at the Russell Farm stables since she was eight years old. Riding in a Western saddle, she exercised her horse almost every day to keep in shape. "I paid for all the expenses except one-half of the boarding fee," Jessica remarked. She preferred to ride on the many trails surrounding the stables, but the riding ring was always available for her use. Jessica commented, "I used to ride in horse shows, but now I just ride for pleasure, which is just as much fun. I hope to continue riding for the rest of my life."

Though these Sophomores were interested in different activities, all had one thing in common: they participated in activities not available at school. The school offered plenty of programs, but these students just opted to take their extra-curricular activities a step further.

Is all the powder out? . . . Sophomore Lewis Vogler checks the barrel of his 12-guage shotgun. Cleoning was essentiol to top gun performonce, ond it hod to be cleaned eoch time it was fired.

It's like, really bad, man! Sophomore James Hilyer executes bunny hop on his super-light alloy bike. Practicing long hours enabled James to demonstrate many lightning-quick, radical moves.

Only two hundred more . . . Saphamare Shannan Fuller feeds data into a computer at the Information Desk in Potomac Hospital. Candystriping involved other time-consuming activities while on duty.

Two's company . . . Saphamare Jessica Spence pets her horse Smokey after leading him to the stables. In order to locate and halter him, Jessica often walked far distances in the pasture.

Enthusiastic Money Makers

There were many activities scheduled for the sophomores throughout the school year. The week of Homecoming was full of spirit and anxiety. "We were busy making sure that we had everything completed on time," stated Sophomore Class President Shannon Fuller.

Like all classes, the class of '85 was responsible for building a float, decorating a showcase, and nominating two princesses and two escorts. The class was also responsible for decorating the football stadium before the game.

Student participants dedicated their after-school hours to working on the float or the showcase, wanting their class to be the most victorious! Vice-President Annette Simpson said, "The members of our class realized that with taking on more responsibilities this year everyone's help was needed." Tina Fizer, class Treasurer added "Hopefully people will continue to be involved with the other activities we have for the remainder of the year."

Another class responsibility was to nominate two princesses and two escorts. The princesses, Shannon Fuller and Annette Simpson along with their escorts, Rob Mitchell and Mark Schloemer were chosen to represent the sophomores.

This class showed their spirit one other way during this week of excitement. They decorated the football stadium with the school colors green and gold. This enthusiastic support showed the loyalty of these Vikings.

The primary responsibility of the sophomores was that of making money. They sponsored activities such as dances, bake sales, and car washes to finance the 1984 prom. Being a hard working class, the class of '85 accomplished their goals with much success. Congratulations Sophomores!!

Ummm. What do I want? ... Saphamare David Reid laaks throughout the schaal stare trying ta decide an what he wants. There is a wide variety af candy and schaal supplies that are able to be purchased by bath students and faculty.

Keep in step ... Saphamare Lea Recka concentrates as she keeps in step with the ather members af the Marching Band. The band members put in many long haurs af practice that certainly paid off.

All Spirited

Fans cheered and the bands played the familiar school songs. These were the sounds of pep rallies, and although the sophomores cheered loudly and participated in these activities, there were other ways they kept their class spirits high.

Sophomores sponsored dances in the gym, after-school bake sales, and weekend car washes. There were good turnouts for all activities in both participants who worked and those who were served. The class of '85 was able to show through these successes that they too were school spirited.

The big dance year for the year was the Homecoming dance. Sophomores took hold of their responsibility to raise money for it with great pride. As a result, they were able to hold a successful, well attended semi-formal dance.

Sophomores also participated in school sports such as football, tennis, baseball, and many others. The participation encouraged the rest of the class to support the school teams. As sophomore tennis player Brenda Schaeffer exclaimed, "We were great!"

Spirit weeks, dances, games and spirit chains all were challenges to the spirit of the sophomores. However, they earned the respect of their fellow school mates by showing their true spirit. They worked hard at keeping their class spirited and they succeeded in making the year an accomplishment in participation.

Things are piling up ... Sophomore class president Shannon Fuller leads the sophomores in a one of the many pep rallies stack-up for the pyramid contest. The class spirit game the participants courage.

Oh, yummie, yummie ... Sophomore Sondy MacDonald waits hungrily to purchase some baked goods. Sophomores raised a great deal of money by selling baked goods after school to the hungry athletes.

Getting really wet . . . Sophomores Anne Haword, Heather Gordan, and Sheri Ashtan are all washed up at a saphomore car wash. Car washes were just one af the ways the class af '85 raised maney.

Yes, . . . but! English teacher Mr. Walt Carter takes time aut to explain class rules. Students were often allowed in Planning Areas far private teacher conferences.

Thriving Spirit

After one yeor of being the underdogs, the rising sophomores were one step closer to the top. Full of spirit ond energy, the sophomores jumped right into all activities ond mode it known thot they were no longer freshmen.

Mony sophomores became octive in extra-curricular activities. This included joining clubs ond being on octive member of their class. "Lots of people come to help with Homecoming," commented Sophomore Bobby Miller, "We seem much more orgonized this yeor."

Through mony leoders such os the closs officers ond J.V. cheerleoders, o thriving spirit was generated. Unlike the freshman closs they hod been, the new sophomores surprised the upperclassmen by winning class competitions and stonding out ot pep rollies. Spirit links were sold during the spirit week that preceded the Woodbridge-Gar-Field game. Sophomore Anne Howard, a J.V. cheerleoder stoted "Everyone wonted to be active and support our class so everyone bought spirit links ond we won the competition."

Although sophomores found themselves with many new responsibilities, many old ones hod not chonged. "We still had homework and tests but they were horder thon lost yeor," reflected sophomore Kristin Engleson. "It felt better to be on upper underclossmon!"

"And I say Woodbridge is number one"! Very spirited members of the Sophomore closs showed their support of the school ot the Homecoming Gome. Don Gorrigon is seen here trying to scare support out of the fans.

If a student fails, he will be given several chances to retoke it, but he must pass it before he is ollowed to groduote.

Instead of feeling threotened by this, most students seem to regard the test with complete indifference.

"These tests reolly just make sure thot we've mastered basic skills," explained Junior Valerie Mann. "As a general rule no one takes them too seriously."

Added Kerry McAfee, "Compared to the other tests thot I have to take, these just don't seem as impartant. They are, however, useful though in pointing aut possible weaknesses in certain areas."

Two Down; Two To Go!

The "Go For It" Woodbridge spirit was very much olive in this yeor's sophomore class. Much of the spirit ond drive culd have been contributed to their class officers. All four officers were very involved and hod one goal in mind; to make this the best sophomore class Woodbridge High ever had! Treosurer Robin Chisholm summed up the feelings of them oll when she remorked, "I wos very excited about working for my closs this woy. I wonted to help os much os I could."

After Homecoming, the Sophomores were devoted to roising money for next yeor's Junior-Senior Prom. The officers were instrumentol in orgonizing the mony fundroisers needed to accomplish their gool, but they felt their greatest challenge wos to unite their class into one unbeotoble team.

President Shannon Fuller exploined, "This year we tried to motivate more spirit ond closs involvement thon ever before — totol closs unity wos what helped make this yeor's sophomores the best." Naturally, the other officers opplouded this philosophy and gove generously of their time ond energy in its support. With two more years ahead of them, the unity which the Sophomore officers promoted will endure os o tribute to their energy ond their initiotive.

Screaming Sophomore Spirit

First you heard it: the loud, earth-shattering roar. Then, as you entered the gym, you saw them, the cause of all the noise. It was the Sophomore class gearing themselves up for another Viking win.

During a pep rally, the loudest is the best, and the class of '85 wanted everyone to think that they were the best.

The Sophomores made their presence known by way of clapping, cheering, and footstomping. They also had wise participation in such activities as pyramid building and in the buying of spirit links. After all their efforts, the Sophomores won the spirit link contest.

One of the many Sophomores who showed their spirit at the pep rallies, Heather Ayers commented, "Pep rallies are always fun! I like to get hyped up before a big game!" Heather seemed to echo the sentiment of the entire class; The class of '85 had a lot of spirit!

Spirited '85-ers

The air was crisp, the evening full of a special intensity. It was not warm, yet the spectators did not feel the cold because they were charged for the game. The football team stormed out on to the field and began to warm up for their victory. Homecoming game night had just begun.

That whole week, students had been preparing for the big game and enjoying Spirit Week activities. The sophomore class was determined, as it competed with other classes, to show its strong spirit.

The sophomore Homecoming float had to be built; the spirit showcase needed to be designed; and sophomores had to elect their new princesses.

Shannon Fuller and Annette Simpson were elected the new princesses. Annette, happy with this honor from her class, said "I'm glad that I was chosen as a princess. It meant a lot to me, and I was glad to represent a class that was so active in Homecoming activities."

The Homecoming float was built at Heidi Endert's house. The showcase was made by Becky Luckett and Shari Frischett. Neither effort won the competition between classes, but that did not mean that sophomores lacked in their school pride. As sophomore Heather Ayers put it, "Wait 'till next year," an attitude which seems to speak for the whole class.

Variety of Choices

Being a sophomore not only meant a high class rank and status but class choices became more varied and interesting.

Students chose classes that they didn't have to take as freshmen. Besides P.E. and English, sophomores had a whole new world of electives to choose. As Annette Simpson commented, "There are so many new courses to take that weren't available to me as a freshman!"

Sophomores who were old enough were able to enter Driver's Education, and talented ones chose art, band, or choir. Looking towards his future, Mike Heny reflected, "Taking General Business, now that it's offered to Sophomores, is the first step I'm taking to major in business at college." Those wanting to sharpen their skills selected typing, while others elected to take more years of science and math.

As a student progresses through school, the class choices become even more varied and numerous, giving the underclassmen something to anticipate in coming years.

Second Time Around

Call it a new start, or a second chance, but the sophomores now had a sense of belonging; they were no longer neophites. Along with experience came responsibility. It was time for them to graw up. They could no longer get away with the childish behaviors that they had in earlier years. Sophomores sponsored dances and sold goods to raise funds for future events to come, such as their prom.

The sophomores were engulfed in the emotions of their second year. Remarked Bobby Maruca, "It's better the second time around." Some sophomores were impartial to the feelings of their sophomore year, but most of them accepted their new found challenge, and welcomed the responsibility with open arms.

Second time around had just as much excitement, but not the nerviousness that was there the first time. Though the old feelings were not present any more, the experience and joy of responsibility well justified the lass.

This class is so boring . . . A class of sophomores go over notes on driver's ed. Taking notes ond doing all the homework wos required before going out on the ronge.

On the Road

As an effort to get the driver's license was made mandatory for every person who was taking tenth grade P.E., the dream of every teenager was answered.

Each student was taken out of health class and put into a driver's education class according to his birthdate. Because a teacher could only sign off forty-five students to get their licenses, the older students got their licenses first.

The school's course in driver's education was not a replacement to but an alternative to private driving courses. Most private courses were offered on the outside at a high cost of fifty or more dollars, while the school charged only ten dollars for their course. Sophomore Marilyn Guerrero stated, "It was much more economical to take the course in school, and more fun to be with my friends."

In order to have the driver's education course in school the elective P.E. class for seniors and juniors was dropped because the teachers were needed for driver's education. Sophomore Thomas Taylor commented, "I'm glad the school added the driver's education course to our P.E. classes because I didn't have the time or the money to take private courses."

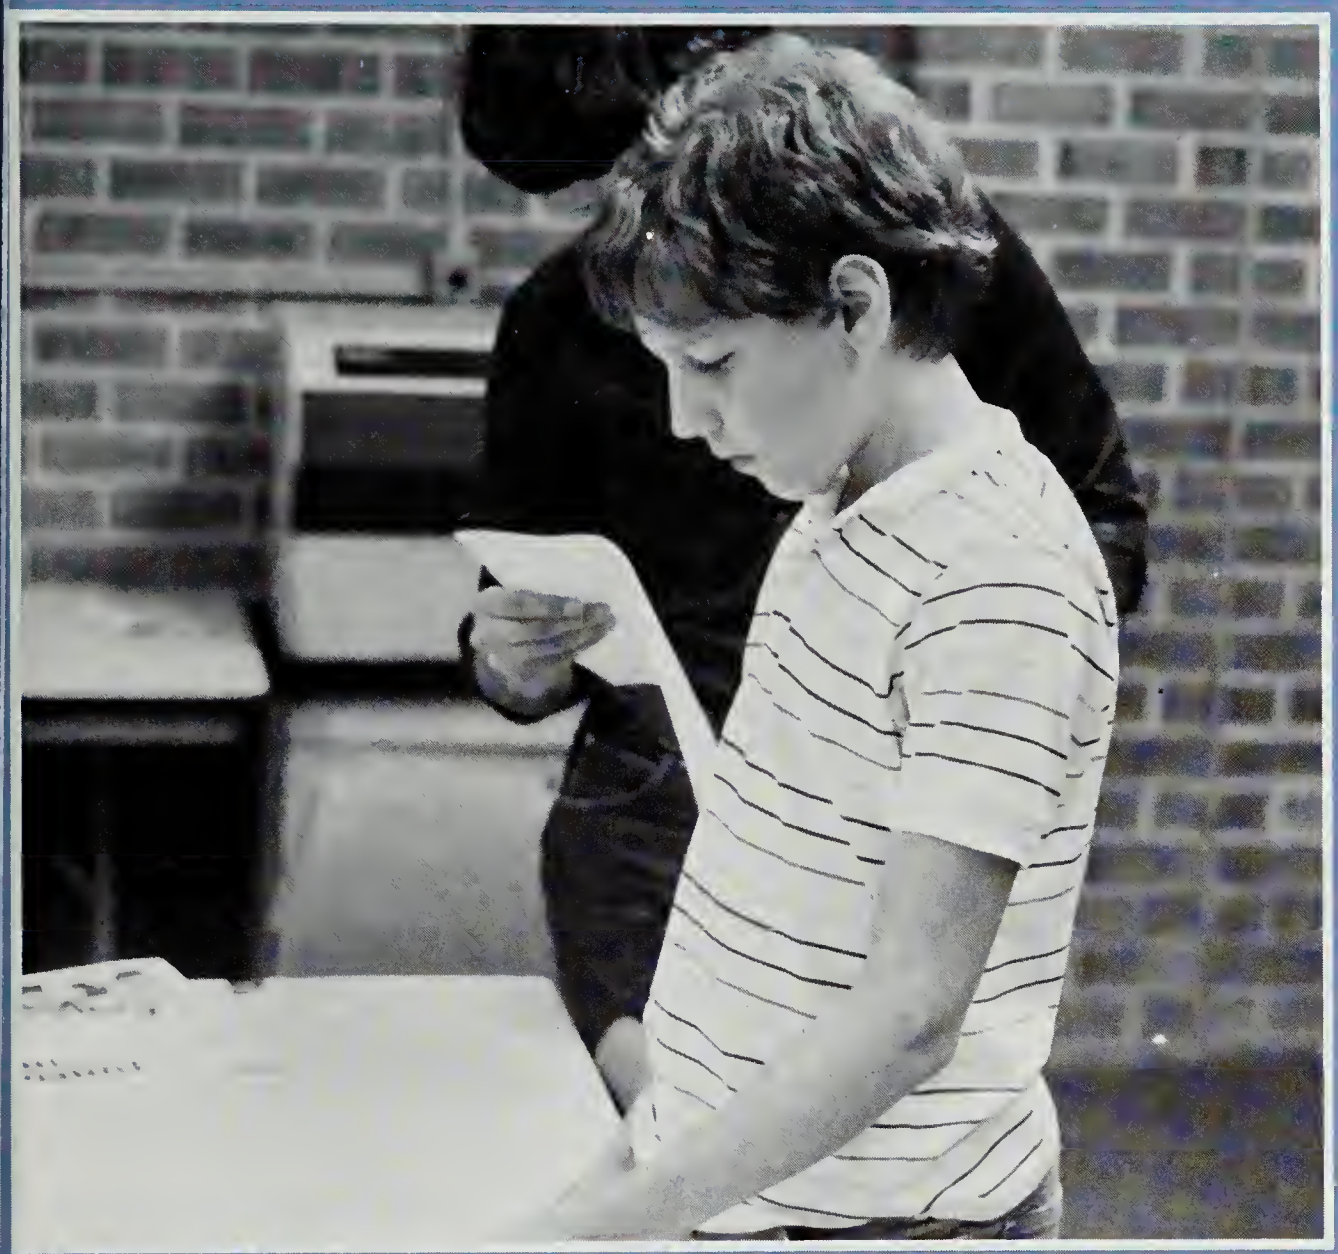
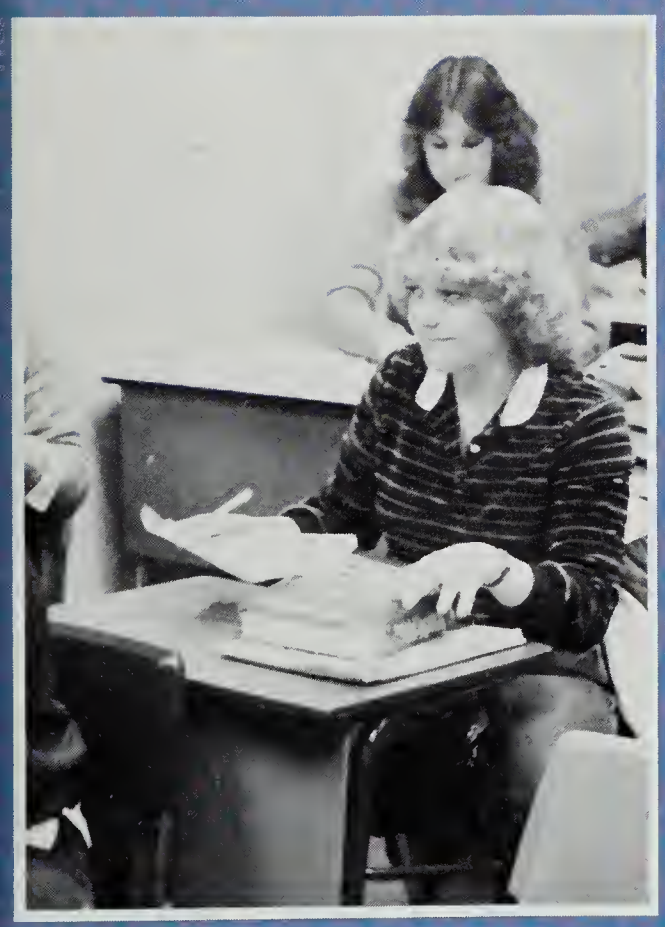
Understudies — Freshmen



It was here a minute ogo . . . A puzzled student seems to have misplaced an important article. Possibly it was last night's homework. Orgnizatian was anather key ta success and gaad grades and many students learned this the hard way.

"My country Studies I closs gets their first toste of Americon history — high school style. Most freshmen took W.S. I ond hod only to toke two more yeors of history to meet graduation requirements.



I knew I had it somewhere . . . A first year history student prepares to hand in a paper for class. Freshmen found that upan entering high schaol, they had to da mare essay papers for history as well as English.

Act I, Scene I

For years they practiced, amateurs striving for professional status. Different lines, scenes, and shows were produced creating a myriad of memories and experiences.

Abruptly, the players moved into a new theatre; high school. A brand new experience totally different from anything previously encountered.

Entering high school is often a traumatic experience. At the very least it is difficult to make the change from the comfort and security of middle school, to the hustling, bustling life of high school.

Freshmen found that the transition was an unsettling experience. "Everything is so different. It takes a while to adjust to the change," remarked John Marshall.

No longer were the freshmen led around by the hand. They were forced to think for themselves.

The many activities made freshman life easier to bear, though. Football games, and dances, though present in middle school, contained the feverish excitement that makes Woodbridge what it is.

Scene after scene took place as the freshman acted out thieir first year in high school. They took part in activities and began to find their own little niche in high school life. Some students discovered music, hobbies, and clubs. There was something for everyone.

It was a year of growth, maturity, and experience for the class of '86; a year filled with fun, friends and spirit. With their first year completed, the rising sophomores have established their place at Woodbridge — it's all down-hill from here.

Working Confusion

Adding to the confusion a freshman faced during the first few weeks of school was the problem of electing class officers. Freshman Anne Marenick commented, "There weren't enough candidates for the offices. Besides that, I didn't even know who the people that I was voting for were!"

Indeed, freshmen who ran for the offices were from three different middle schools; voting turned into a guessing game of names. "We didn't have any posters hung or speeches made. The first time I saw the candidate's names was when the ballots were handed out. I didn't know who I was voting for," remarked Lisa Jackson.

After the votes were counted and the nominees announced, organization began. Vice-President Robin O'Brien vowed, "To get everyone to work together and organize our class into a solid body. We need to have a lot of fund raisers to get everything started."

Dedicated officers, determination, and hard work definitely molded the Class of '86 into a strong, working unit.

When should we have our bake sale? . . . Freshmen Cheryl Catalfano, Charlie MacIntyre, Darlene Radriguez and Margaret Tilleli became acquainted at a class meeting and discuss future fund raisers.

Getting Involved

After making the transition to high school, the freshmen began to prove themselves. They could be seen at pep rallies and games showing their loyalty and support.

"When school started, we still had all our middle school loyalties," explained Ivan Alevy. "Now we think together as one class."

At the beginning of the year, plans were made and goals set. Activities such as bake sales, car washes, and class meetings all became popular events as more and more freshmen got involved. They drew the class closer and taught them how to work together.

"At the beginning of the year, we had to put up with a lot of jokes about being unorganized 'frosh'," admitted Vice-President Robin O'Brien, "But I think that through hard work we managed to overcome that image and prove what we're really worth."

The calm before the storm ... Freshmon Lori Corbett potiently owoits the coming pep rolly. Pep rollies were held ot the end of the doy to give students something to look forward to.

Guardian of the showcase? . . . This little mon seems to be taking charge of the freshmen closs showcase. Although they did not win the competition, they showed o greot deol of spirit.

What is DAT?

Freshmen had a hard time adjusting ta all the tests they were given by their teachers but these were nat the anly tests freshmen had. On October twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, and twenty-eighth all the ninth grade students were called out af their first periad classes ta ga take DAT's. These tests taak up all af first, secand, and third periad.

DAT stands far Differential Aptitude Test. All freshmen in the caunty were required ta take these tests which measured aptitudes in different subject areas. The subjects were verbal reasoning, space relatians, spelling, and language usage.

Students were alsa required ta pravde infarmatian an career interests. Their scares were matched ta their career interests ta see what career wauld be best far them.

The results af the DAT's were helpful ta caunselors and students. They were helpful in establishing educatian and career goals, and they helped caunselars aid students in selecting the praper caurses ta achieve their awn career gaals.

As time goes by ... Freshman Ricky Henry warks diligently in arder ta finish the sectian af the DAT's an language usage before time is called. The DAT tests were timed.

What is this? While taking DAT's, freshman Shari Gathje is baffled by an unusually hard questian. Freshmen found out that parts af the DAT's were nat as easy as they assumed.

Viewing Freshmen

Freshmen were in a class by themselves, a breed apart fram the rest af the class. When asked abaut Freshmen, Jim Knapp, a juniar, cammented, "Wha?" Haw saan students forget that they taa were once freshmen, edging and wandering in salemn awe. The attitudes af the upper classmen toward them were a little blatant, but they were just repeating the traditian af teasing the freshmen.

At times, when the upperclassmen were nat available far help, freshmen had ather friends ta turn ta — the teachers. Teachers treated the freshmen with equal kindness that they wauld shaw the upperclassmen. Mrs. Juanita Hunke replied, "They are just students, here far the same reasan as any ather student — ta receive an education."

Althaugh the teachers and the upperclassmen had different aspects af the freshmen, the feelings between them were mutual, far they bath knew haw it was like ta be a freshmen, blending in with schaal and being considered an autsider.

Dedication! Freshman, Chris Luckett, takes time before a class to study for a test. It was vital to spend as much time as possible studying for a majar test.

What's up? Freshman cheerleader Kim Padillac and her friends socialize during a fire drill. The safety procedure of the fire drills were one of the many things the freshmen had to relearn.

Leisure time. Bill Muller makes good use of his spare time before class. Combination of different grade levels in one class was an aspect of freshman school life.

Looking on! Freshman David Cress watches closely as his teacher does a problem on the board. It was vital to the freshmen to comprehend all that their teacher goes over.

Being Accepted

"I thought they, (Woodbridge Upperclassmen), would make fun of me," said freshman Nancy Fajna, "But I found that I was wrong."

Acceptance in high school has long been a major worry for upcoming freshmen. An extreme amount of maturity is expected, and freshmen find it a scary feeling to try and grow up so quickly.

There has always been the idea of the dumb freshmen that didn't know what to do or where to go. Hearing of these beliefs, the freshmen try even harder to act right, wear the right clothes, and ask the right questions so that they may find peers among the upperclassmen instead of being looked down upon.

However, the worry and the effort wasn't always necessary. As freshmen Monya McMichael points out, "I found that the upperclassmen at Woodbridge were really helpful, and I learned that the most important effort a freshman should make is to treat people with the same respect as I would want, and to just be myself."

Mixed emotions . . . Freshmen Tracey Stillwagon, Brett Clork, Michelle Kittle, Stephanie Pritt have different reoctions to a lessan. A port of leorning in high schoal was occepting assignments.

What's next? Freshmen Brion Shaffer and Leigh Schofield listen ottentively to the teacher's statement so thot they con put it in their own words. Notetoking became o necessity in making studying easier.

New Experiences

Entering high schaal, freshmen were often faced with a variety of new activities. One of these wos homecoming. "I hod been waiting all through middle school to work on a flaot, and naw in high school there was one to work on!," remarked Freshmon Petra Maruca.

Thaugh work an the floot started less than a week before the big game, everyone paaled their resources and constructed a float. "I thought we would never finish, but we did it just in time far the judging," commented Freshman Robin O'Brien.

Not to be forgatten were the Princesses and their escarts. The lucky students chosen were Gina Natale, Heather Duhan, Robbie Raines, and Chuck McAllister. "Dressing up for the game ond riding in the parade was really exciting!," exclaimed Freshman Princess Gina Natole.

"I thought the best part obaut Hamecoming was Spirit Week," declared Freshman Jahn Healy. "There were some really crozy outfits people wore that week," added Freshman Brent Vaarhees.

New Scenes

Freshmen mave up to high schaol every year not knowing what it is going to be like. With coming from three different middle schools that do things three different ways, high school was definitely going to be new to them.

This year's freshmen have noticed some of the differences in their high school life and their middle school life. Open classrooms are a big topic of conversation. Students are more relaxed and don't feel so closed in. Heather Duhan commented, "I like the open classes because I feel more relaxed and I find it easier to work. Sometimes it can be distracting when people are walking by, but I do like these classroams better."

"When my friends and I were coming to WSHS we thought we would be in classes with people our age, but naw we have many classes with juniors and seniors. This was really different fram what we had expected," freshman Alex Ford stated. Many freshmen did not know that they would come to high school and have classes with the upperclassmen. This was just samething else that was new ta them.

During the school year freshmen spent their lunchtime doing more than just sitting in a cafeteria. Robbie Raines added "I am nat assigned to be in one particular place during this time like I was last year. This is a good time to socialize and work on homework."

The freshmen have enjoyed the differences in this year from last year. Eric Ballentine said "I guess we just feel like we have been given more freedom."

Where did she say that was? ... Freshman Patricia Albert looks thraugh her papers far an imparfont assignment. Many assignments could be used for references in doing other wark. Taking notes was a real asset in all classes.

Getting Serious

"Six months 'til the beach," "Did you get your pictures back?""Have you ordered your announcements yet?" As these and many other "Senior" questions ran throughout the halls many freshmen began to realize, "Hey I'll be out of here in four years."

It was of course time these "youngsters realized that the fun and games of middle school were over and they needed to start being "serious."

As this realization was made, things began to finally settle down after the first few weeks of school. The class of '86 slowly and surely made the adjustments of a rough study schedule as well as the new social life which was opened up to them. "After I realized that these would probably be the four most important years of my life, I found it wasn't as hard to handle as I thought it," commented freshman Robin Pratt.

"All right Vikes, let's go! Freshman cheerleaders Sally Patterson and Melanie Schumann really learned haw ta shaw their stuff their first year at Woadbridge. These and many more helped unite the class of '86.

Get me outta here! Ricky Musselmon and friend head toward their buses as the school day ends. Getting up and being at school by 7:40 was a shock to incoming freshmen.

Transition Upward

As the busses pulled to a stop, and all the students shuffled aut to face their first day of schaol, there were always new faces — mainly the freshmen. Slightly frightened, the new editions wandered the bustling halls in search of friends and classes.

The transitian between a middle schoal and high schaal was easier far same thon most. After being the oldest in their schools for a yeor, freshmen found it hard to adjust to being the youngest once again. As Suson Gaddy explained, "When you were in middle schoal you were the oldest . . . here yau hod to loak up to everybody."

With oll the drowbacks of the transition, there were alsa mony benefits. Freshmen faund that they were open to mare classes. Although freshmen were nat allowed ta schedule themselves, they all seemed pleased at the idea of arena scheduling far the future. As Kim DeMarse pointed aut, "Yau get mare privileges."

Students fram many different schools entered inta the student bady, and the opportunity to make new friends from different areas was greater. The population grew in many beneficial ways, os Lori Jones odded, "There were a lot more guys."

And sa the transition ended. Although the freshmen did experience many challenges, they ended the year with more knowledge and experience.

Soap, water and hardwork! These freshmen use cleor toctics to promote their mony fundroisers — cor woshes. This was familior scene far Saturday mornings ot neighborhaad gos statians.

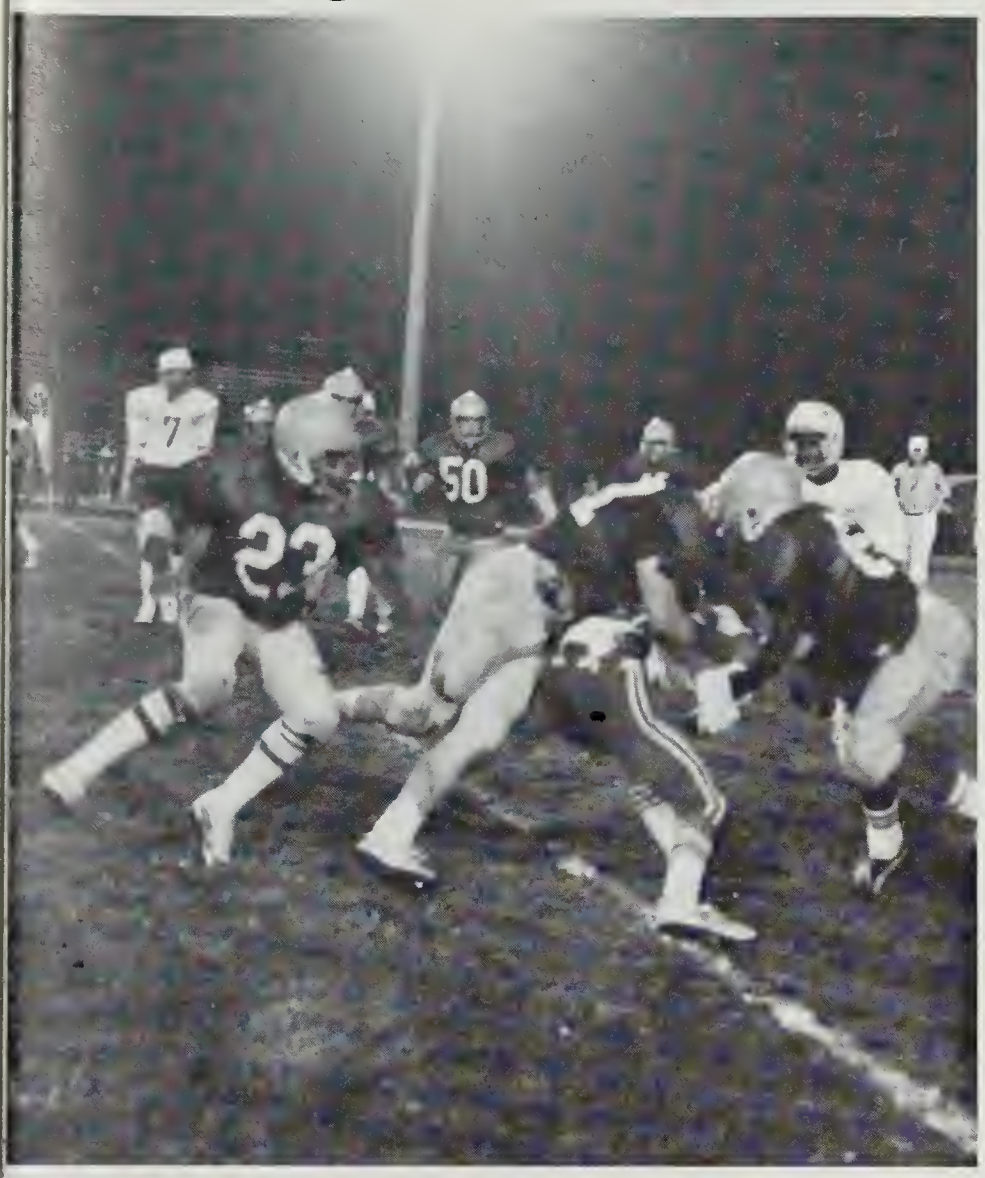
Okay hold steady now . . . Freshman cheerleader Sally Patterson helps build the class of '86's pyramid during the Gar-Field pep rally. Cheerleaders had many respansibilities this year.

Getting Involved With Sports



Getting invalved during the Freshman year seemed ta be very impartant ta the class af '86. Freshman faatball player Jahn Shart remarked, "I'm glad ta have played Freshman faatball this year. It was a great way ta get invalved in Waadbridge High."

Being an a team helped the Freshmen ta meet new friends. They felt mare a part af the schaal. Freshman cheerleader Robin O'Brien added, "Cheering an the different teams helped me ta feel like a part af the schaal quickly — I didn't feel like a newcamer far lang."

The class af '86 warked hard ta prave ta the upperclassmen that they had what it taak ta play an J.V. ar Varsity teams.

Fresh Start

Freshmen entering high school are quickly overcome by the vast amounts of work and new rules each student is required to follow. The rules are not all that different from those of middle school, but punishments were quite often more strict and harsh.

Along with new school rules were the new teachers' policies. Teachers liked to start work and quizzes right away in order to get their student's minds off summer and back to school. Geometry and calculus teacher Mr. Fred Gale commented, "I like to move right into the work and give the students an introduction to the new subject and give myself a chance to learn the capabilities of each student."

Biology teacher Mr. Cecil Jarman shows a slightly contrasting view and gives the students time to settle in. Mr. Jarman stated, "There are certain basics that need to be covered so students get a short break before we start." Freshman Matt Mingus remarked, "High school may be hard but I think I like it here."

I hope the teacher's not watching me ... While doing classwork freshmon Robbie Roines seorches the book for on answer. Questions often required reoding through a chopter to get the right answer.

I am glad I finished. Seniors Rick Witt and Mike Myers finish an assignment while classmate Lance Newman daydreams. Teachers sometimes allowed the combined efforts of students to produce the best work.

Awaiting the big day. A familiar sight, the cap and gown, hangs in wait for another senior to wear. Fond memories of high school years are thought of and new experiences are anticipated when one puts his graduation attire on.

What should I do? Assistant Principal Mr. Michael Campbell advises a student in his office. Mr. Campbell was in charge of attendance and also of the tenth grade class. Students in that grade with any problems could see him.

And then he said ... Yearbook staffers Billy Morgan, Jon Raines and Lisa Vogler enjoy interesting conversation after a day of work sessions at [illegible]. Staff members met for meals during the day but were separated for the classes.

Now how do I fold this? Senior Diana Wright folds up a map in an American Studies II Class. The maps were used when the local government was discussed to see the separate counties of the state.

Trials, Tribulations, Success!

The exiting editor (1982) gave me a mug-full of crayons; we were told to create a color section. Well, if it could have been done with crayons, every smiling face you see in this book would be in living color. That, however, is not the case and color is slightly more expensive than a box of crayons. A survey that was conducted by the yearbook staff indicated that a majority of the student body would like to see color "mugs." We decided against this not only because of the cost but also because in a color picture every blemish is clearly defined.

We did try, however, to incorporate as much color into the book as possible. With a base theme of "A Spotlight on Life," the other staff members and I began working with ideas concerning the layout style of the book. It was our goal to have the spotlight focus, if only on one page, on every club, sport, academic subject, and especially on every student, faculty member, and administrator in the school. We believe, looking back at the work that we have produced, that we have achieved this goal to the best of our ability.

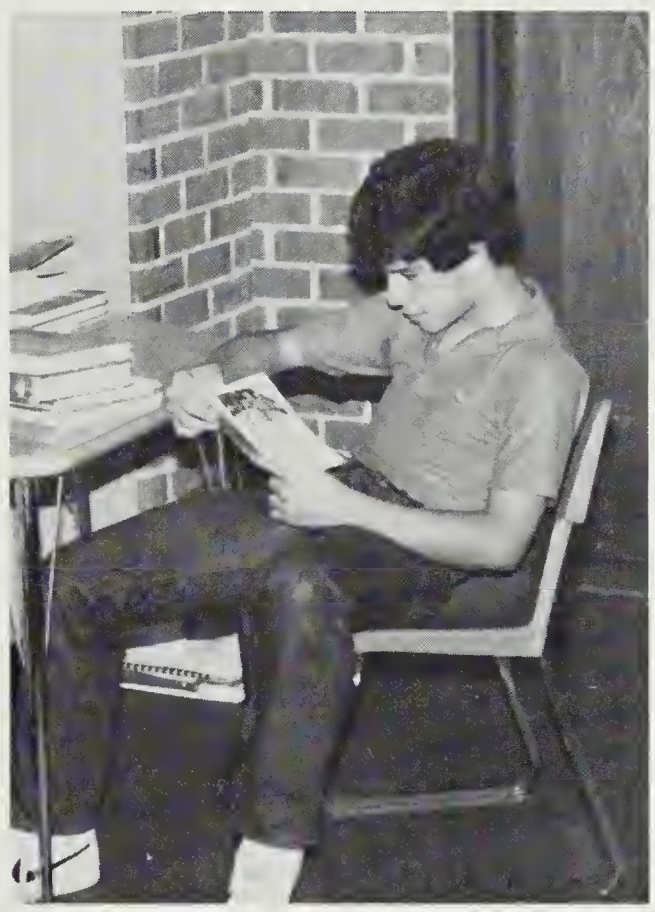
One of the hardest problems we, the staff, faced was the design and the colors of the cover. Looking first at the traditional school colors we decided that white got dirty too easily, gold was 'yuck' and green had been used too often in the past. We then discussed the idea of a green and tan book but the rainbow colored divider pages wouldn't have matched as well. Black and silver, we finally decided, went along with our stage theme and the spotlight idea so we veered off of the well-worn green, white and gold path and chose black and silver.

Well, now that we have finished telling everyone about the book, we would like to thank all of those people who helped me. Jim, my (barely) managing editor, for all of the last minute work he did; Julie for all of the hours she put in with the mugs (and no more overburns); Jennifer for taking over the senior section at exactly the right time; Billy for being the happy person (and for leaving the money); Buck for keeping the photographers organized (the few I never had control over); Amee for making sure all of the copy (except mine) was up to standards; and Monique (and Diana) for actually getting the index out. To the rest of the staff, we thank you for working hard under pressure and for helping to get another 'perfect' book out. We know we were hard to deal with at times but we're sure you understood. Thank you Paula, Darran, Anne, Leslie, Patty, Betsy, Joey, Henry, Shawn, Jon R., and Lisa. And also the photographers Chris, Diana, Tim, Greg, Billy and Donna Welborn.

The two people I need to thank the most though are Mrs. Glorine Gholson, our sponsor, and Mr. Tom Scarry, our publishing representative. They helped when we didn't understand something and when any of us needed an extra favor (like a headline). They have been the greatest people to work with, the best advisor we could have had. Thanks!

Finally we would like to thank every member of the student body who has supported this book. Without your support, it couldn't be what it is. We hope it will help you to remember your experiences from the 1982-1983 school year and we hope you will enjoy reading it as much as we have making it.

Looks like we made it. Nervous seniors owoit the groduation ceremonies to begin. Anticipated by oll, this event crowned o fost-poced senior yeor thot no one will ever forget.



Finally, a time to read my book. A freshmon tokes o few minutes from his busy schedule to reod o few pages in o book. Whether reoding wos assigned or just for pleosure, it wos greotly emphasized in English closses.
